te in on the Sabbath daye. Then remayned the chapmen and marchauntes once or twyce ouer nighte without Jerusalem with all maner of wares. Then reprovied I them sore, z sayde vnto them: Why tary ye all nighte aboute the wall? If ye do it once agayne, I wil laye handes vpon you. From that tyme forth came they nomore on the Sabbath. And I sayde vnto the Levites which were cleane, that they shulde come and kepe the gates, to halowe the Sabbath daye. Ethynke vpon me (O my God) concerninge this also, z spare me acordinge to thy greate mercy.

And at the same tyme sawe I Jewes, that married wyues of Asdod, Ammon and of Moab, and their children spake halfe in the speache of Asdod, and coude not speake in y Jewish language, but by y tonge mighte a ma perceauie euery people. And I reprovied them, and cursed them, z smote certayne men of the, and plucked them vp, and toke an oath of them by God: Ye shal not geue youre daughters vnto their sonnes, nether shal ye take their daughters vnto youre sonnes, or for youre selues. Dyd not Salomon y kynge of Israel synne ther in? yet amonge many heythen was there no kynge like him, z he was deare vnto his God, and God made him kynge ouer all Israel, and the outlandish women.

And one of the children of Joiada the sonne of Eliafib y hye prest, had made a contracte wych Saneballath the Horonite: but I chased him fro me. O my God, ethynke thou vpon them that are quyte of the presthode, and haue desyled the conenaut of the presthode and of the Levites. Thus clensed I them from all such as were outlandish, and appoynted the courses of the prestes and Levites, euery one to his office, and to offre the wood at tymes appoynted, and the first frutes. Ethyn thou vpon me (O my God) for the best.

At the tyme of Ahasuerus, which reigned from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and seven and twentye lordes, what tyme as he sat on his seate roiall in the castell of Susan in the thirde yeare of his reigne, he made a feast vnto all his prynces and scruauntes, namely vnto the mighthe men of Persia and Media, to the Debities and rulers of his countrees, that he might shewe the noble riches of his kyngdome, and the glorious worshippe of his greatnesse, many dayes longe, euen an hundred and foure score dayes.

And whan these dayes were expyred, the kyng made a feast vnto all the people that were in the castell of Susan, both vnto grete and small, seven dayes longe in the court of the garden by the kynges palace: wher there hanged whyte, reed & yalow clothes fastened with coardes of linnen and scarlet in silver rynges, vpon pylers of Marbl stone.

be vpon a pauement of grene, white, yalow and black Marble. And the dunc was caried in vessels of golde, and there was ever chaunge of vessel. And the kynges wine was moche accordynge to the power of the kyng. And noman was appoynted what he shulde dunc: for the kyng had commaunded all the officers of his house, that every one shulde do as it lyked him. And the quene Vasthi made a feast also for the women in the palace of Ahasuerus. And on the senenth daye whan the kyng was mery of the wine, he comaunded Michman, Bistha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Sethar and Charcas, the seven chamberlaynes (that dyd seruyce in the presence of kyng Ahasuerus) to fetch the quene Vasthi with the crowne regall, that he might shewe to people and prynces hir fairnesse: for she was bewtifull. But the quene Vasthi wolde not come at the kynges worde by his chamberlaynes. Then was the kyng very wroth, and his indignacio kyndled in him.

And the kyng spake to the wyse men that had vnderstandynge in the ordinaunces of the londe (for the kynges matters must be handled before all such as haue knowlege of the lawe and iudgment: And the nexte vnto him were, Charsena, Sethar, Admatha, Tharsis, Meres, Marsena and Memuchan, the seven prynces of the Persians, and Meedes, which sawe the kynges face, and satte aboue in the kyngdome) What lawe shulde be execute vpon the quene Vasthi, because she dyd not accordynge to the worde of the kyng by his chamberlaines. The saide Memuchan before the kyng & the prynces: The quene Vasthi hath not onely done euell agaynst the kyng but also agaynst all the prynces and all the people in all the lordes of kyng Ahasuerus for this dede of the quene shall come abroad vnto all women, so that they shall despyse their husbandes before their eyes, and shall saye: The kyng Ahasuerus comaunded Vasthi & quene to come before him, but she wolde not. And so shall the pryncesses in Persia and Media saye lykewyse vnto all the kynges prynces, whan they heare of this dede of the quene, thus shall there aryse despyte fulnes and wrath ynough. If it please the kyng, let there go a kyngly commaundment from him, and let it be wrytten accordynge to the lawe of the Persians and Medians (and not to be transgressed) that Vasthi come nomore before kyng Ahasuerus, and let the kyng geue the kyngdome vnto another that is better then she.

And þ this wrytinge of the kynge which shalbe made, be published thorow out all his empyre (which is greate) that all wyues maye holde their husbundes in honoure, both amonge greate and smal.

This pleased the kynge and the prynces, and the kynge dyd acordinge to the worde of Memuchan. Then were there letters sent forth in to all the kynges londes, in to every londe acordinge to the wrytinge ther of, and to every people after their langage, þ every man shulde be lord in his awne house. And this caused he be spoken after the language of his people.

The II Chapter.

After these actes whan the displeasure of kynge Ahasuerus was layed, he thoughte vpon Vasthi, what she had done, and what was concluded concernynge her. Then sayde the kynges seruantes: Let there be fayre yonge virgins soughte for the kynge, and let the kynge appoynte ouerseers in all þ londes of his empyre, that they maye brynge together all fayre yonge virgins vnto the castel of Susan to the Womens buyldinge, vnder the hande of Hegai the kynges chamberlayne, that kepeth the women, and let him geue them their apparell. And loke which damsell pleaseth the kynge, let her be quene in Vasthis steade. This pleased the kynge, and he dyd so.

In the castell of Susan there was a Jewe, whose name was Mardocheus, the sonne of Jair, the sonne of Simei, the sonne of Cis, the sonne of Jemini, which was carried awaye from Jerusalem, whan Jechonias the kynge of Iuda was led awaye, (whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon carried awaye) and he nourished Hadassa (that is Hester) his uncles daughter: for she had neither father nor mother, and she was a fayre and beutyfull damsell. And whan hir father and mother dyed, Mardocheus receaued her as his awne daughter.

Now whan þ kynges comaundemēt and comysion was published, 2 many dāels were broughte together vnto the castell of Susan vnder þ hande of Hegai, Hester, was take also vnto þ kynges house vnder þ hande of Hegai þ keeper of þ womē, 2 the damsell pleased him, 2 she founde grace in his sighte. And he put her w hir maydēs in þ best place of þ Womens buildige. And Hester shewed it not vnto hir people 2 hir kynred: for Mardocheus had charged her, þ she shulde not tell it. And Mardocheus walked every daye before þ courtte of þ Womens buyldinge, þ he might knowe how Hester dyd, and what shulde become of her.

And whan the appoynted tyme of every damsell came that she shulde come to þ kynge Ahasuerus, after that she had bene twolue monethes in the deckynge of the women (for their deckynge must haue so moch tyme, namely sixe monethes with Balme 2 Myre, 2 sixe monethes w good spyces, so were the womē beutyfied) then wente there one damsell vnto þ kynge, and what so euer she requyred, þ must be geue her to go w her out of the Womens buyldinge vnto þ kynges palace. And whan one came in the euenynge, þ same wēt frō him on þ morow in to þ seconde house of women, vnder the hande of Saasgas the kynges chamberlayne, which kepeth þ concubines. And she must come vnto the kynge nomore, excepte it pleased the kynge, and that he caused her to be called by name.

Now whan the tyme came of Hester the daughter of Abihail Mardocheus uncle (whom he had receaued as his awne daughter) þ she shulde come to the kynge, she desired nothinge but what Hegai the kynges chamberlayne the keeper of the women sayde.

And Hester founde fauoure in the sighte of all them that loked vpon her. And Hester was taken vnto kynge Ahasuerus in to the house royall, in the tenth moneth which is called Tebeth, in the seuenthe yere of his reigne.

And the kynge loved Hester aboue all the women, and she founde grace and mercy in his sighte before all the virgins: and he set the quenes crowne vpon hir heade, and made her quene in steade of Vasthi. And the kynge made a greate feast vnto all his prynces and seruantes (which feast was because of Hester) and let the londes be in quyetnes, 2 gaue royall giftes.

And whan the virgins were gathered together the seconde tyme, Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate. And as yet had not Hester shewed hir kynred and hir people, acordinge as Mardocheus had bydden her: for Hester dyd after the worde of Mardocheus, like as whan he was hir entoure. At the same tyme whyle Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate, two of the kynges chamberlaynes, Bigthan and Theres which kepeth the doore, were wroth, and sought to laye their handes on the kynge Ahasuerus: Wherof Mardocheus gat knowlege, and tolde it vnto quene Hester, and Hester certified the kynge ther of in Mardocheus name. And whan inquisi cion was made, it was founde so. And they were both hanged on tre: and it was wrytten in the Cronicles before the kynge.

The III. Chapter.

After these actes dyd the kynge promote Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite, vnd set him hye, & set his seate aboue all þe prynces that were with him. And all the kynges seruauntes that were in the gate, bowed their knees, and dyd reuerence vnto Aman: for the kynge had so commaunded. But Mardocheus bowed not the knee, and worshipped him not. Then the kynges seruauntes which were in the kynges gate, sayde vnto Mardocheus: Why transgressst thou the kynges commaundement? And whan they spake this daylie vnto him, and he folowed them not, they tolde Aman, that they myghte se whether Mardocheus matters wolde endure: for he had tolde them, þe he was a Jewe. And whā Aman sawe, that Mardocheus bowed not the knee vnto him, ner worshipped him, he was full of indignacion & despyte, that he shulde laye hondes onely on Mardocheus: for they had shewed him þe people of Mardocheus, but he sought to destroye the people of Mardocheus, and all the people that were in the whole empyre of Ahasuerus.

In the first moneth that is the moneth Nissan, in y twolueyth yere of kynge Ahasuerus, was there occasion and oportunitie sought by Aman, from one daye to another, and from the same moneth vnto the twolueyth moneth, that is the moneth Adar. And Amā sayde vnto kynge Ahasuerus: There is a people scatered abroad and dispersed amonge all people in all the londes of thine empyre, and their lawe is contrary vnto all people, and they do not after the kynges lawes, neither is it the kynges profit to suffre the after this maner. If it please the kynge, let him wryte, that they maye be destroyed, & so wil I weye downe ten thousande talentes of siluer, vnder the handes of the workmen, to be brought in to the kynges chamber. Then toke the kynge his rynge from his hande, and gaue it vnto Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite the Jewes enemye. And the kynge sayde vnto Aman: Let the siluer be geuen the, and that people also, to do withall what pleasech the.

E Then were the kynges scribes called on y thirtenth daye of the first moneth, & there was wrytten (acordynge as Aman commaunded) vnto the kynges prynces, and to the De bites every where in the londes, and to the captaynes of every people in the countrees on every syde, acordynge to the wrytinge of every nacion, and after their language in the name of kynge Ahasuerus, and sealed with the kynges rynge. And the wrytynges were sent by postes in to all the kynges lōdes, to rote out, to kylle, and to destroye all Jewes, both yonge and olde, childre and women in one daye (namely vpon the thirtenth daye of the twolueyth moneth, which is the moneth Adar) and to spoyle their goodes.

This was the summe of the wrytinge, þe there shulde be a commaundement geuen in all londes, to be published vnto all people, þe they shulde be ready agaynst the same daye. And the postes wente in all the haist acordynge to the kynges commaundement. And in the castell of Susan was the commaundement denyed. And the kynge & Aman sat & dranke. But y cite of Susan was disquieted.

The IIII. Chapter.

Shan Mardocheus perceaued all that was done, he rote his clothes, and put on a sack cloth, & asshes, & wente out in to the myddes of the cite, and cried loude and lamentably, and came before the kynges gate: for there might no man entre within the kynges gate, that had a sack cloth on. And in all lōdes & places, as farre as the kynges worde and commaundement extended, there was greate lamentacion amonge the Jewes, and many fasted, wepte, mourned, & laye in sack clothes & in asshes. So Hesters dāsel, and hir chamberlaines, came and tolde it her. Then was the quene exceedingly astonnyed. And she sent rayment, that Mardocheus shulde put them on, and laye the sack clothe from him. But Mardocheus wolde not take them. The called Hester Hathac one of the kynges chamberlaines (which stode before her) and gaue him a commaundement vnto Mardocheus, that he might knowe what it were, and wherfore he dyd so. So Hathac wente forth to Mardocheus vnto the strete of the cite, which was before the kynges gate.

And Mardocheus tolde him of all þe had happened vnto him, and of the summe of siluer that Amā had promysed to weie downe in the kynges chamber because of þe Jewes for to destroye them, and he gaue him the cōpye of the commaundement, that was denyed at Susan to destroye them, that he myghte shewe it vnto Hester, and to speake to her and charge her, þe she shulde go in to the kynge, and make her prayer and supplicacion vnto him for hir people.

The booke of Hester.

And whā Hathat came in, and tolde Hester the wordes of Mardocheus, Hester spake vnto Hathat, and cōmaunded him to saye vnto Mardocheus: All the kynges seruantes, and the people in the lordes of the kyngge knowe, that who so euer cometh within the courte vnto y kyngge, whether it be man or woman, which is not called, the cōmaundement is that the same shal dye immediately, excepte the kyngge holde out the golde cepter vnto him, that he maye lyue. As for me, I haue not bene called to come in to the kyngge now this thirtie dayes.

C And whā Mardocheus was certified of Hesters wordes, Mardocheus had saie agayne vnto Hester: Thynke not to saue thine awne life, whyle thou art in y kynges house before all Jewes: for yf thou holdest thy peace at this tyme, then shal the Jewes haue helpe and deliuerance out of another place, & thou & thy fathers house shalbe destroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kyngdome, for this tymes sake? Hester had geue Mardocheus this answer: Go thou y waye then, & gather together all y Jewes y are founde at Susan, & fast ye for me, y ye eate not & drynke not in thre dayes, nether daye ner night. I & my damself wil fast likewise, & so wyl I go in to the kyngge contrary to the cōmaundement: yf I perishe, I perishe. So Mardocheus wente his waye, & dyd all y Hester had cōmaunded him.

The V. Chapter.

A And on the thirde daye put Hester on hir royall apparell, and stode in the courte of y kynges palace within ouer agaynst the kynges house. And y kyngge sat vpon his royall seate in y kynges palace ouer agaynst y dore of the house. And whan the kyngge sawe Hester the quene stōdunge in the courte, she founde grace in his sighte. And y kyngge helde out the golde cepter in his hāde towards Hester. So Hester stepte forth, and touched the toppe of y cepter. Then sayde y kyngge vnto her: What wile thou quene Hester? & what requyrest thou: art enē the halfe of y empyre, & it shal be geue the. Hester sayde: If it please y kyngge, let y kyngge & Aman come this daye vnto y bancket y I haue prepared. The kyngge sayde: Cause Aman to make haist, y he maye do as Hester hath saide.

Now whā the kyngge & Aman came to y bancket y Hester had prepared, the kyngge sayde vnto Hester whan he had dronken wyne: Hester, what is thy petition: it shal be geue the. And what requyrest thou: euen the halfe of the empyre, it shal be done.

The v. Chap. Ho. cxiij.

Then answered Hester and sayde: My petition and desire is, yf I haue founde grace in y sight of the kyngge, & yf it please the kyngge to geue me my petition, and to fulfill my request, then let the kyngge & Aman come to the bancket y I shal prepare for the, and so wyl I do to morow as the kyngge hath sayde.

Then wente Aman forth the same daye ioyfull and mery in his mynde. And whan he sawe Mardocheus in the kynges gate, y he stode not vp and kneled before him, he was full of indignacion at Mardocheus. Neuertheles he refrained himselfe: and whā he came home, he sent, and called for his frendes, and Seres his wyfe, and tolde them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, all together how the kyngge had promoted him so greatly, and how that he was taken aboue the prynces and seruantes of the kyngge. Aman sayde morouer: Wee and Hester the quene let no man come with the kyngge vnto the bancket that she had prepared, excepte me, and to morow am I bidden vnto her also with the kyngge. But in all this am I not satisfied as longe as I se Mardocheus the Jewe sittinge in y kynges gate. Then sayde Seres his wife and all his frendes vnto him: Let the make a galowe of fiftie cubites hie, & to morow speake thou vnto the kyngge, that Mardocheus maye be hanged thereon, yf thou comest merely with the kyngge vnto the bancket. Aman was well content withall, and caused a galowe to be prepared.

The VI. Chapter.

The same night coulde not the kyngge slepe, and he commaunded to brynge y Cronicles and storyes: which whā they were red before y kyngge, they happened on the place where it was wyrtē, how Mardocheus had tolde, that the kynges two chamberlaynes (which kepte y thresholds) sought to laie hondes on kyng Ahasuerus. And the kyngge saide: What worshippe and good haue we done to Mardocheus therfore? Then sayde the kynges seruantes that mynistrē vnto him. There is nothinge done for him. And the kyngge sayde: Who is in y courtes (for Aman was gone in to y courte without before y kynges house, y he might speake vnto y kyngge to hange Mardocheus on y tre, y he had prepared for him.) And the kynges seruantes saide vnto him: Beholde, Ama stōdeth in the courte. The kyngge saide: Let him come in. And whā Ama came in, y kyngge saide vnto him: What shal be done vnto y mā, whom the kyngge wolde sayne brynge vnto

worshippe: But Haman thought in his hert: Whom shulde the kynge els be glad to brynge vnto worshippe, but me? And Aman sayde vnto the kynge: Let the man vnto whom the kynge wolde be glad to do worshippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be arayed with the royall garmentes which the kynge vseth to weere: and the horse that the kynge rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be set vpon his heade. And let this rayment and horse be deliuered vnder the hande of one of the kynges prynces, that he maye araye the man withall (whom the kynge wolde fayne honoure) and cary him vpon the horse thorow the strete of the cite, and cause it to be proclaimed before him: Thus shal it be done to enery man, whom the kynge wolde fayne honoure.

C The kynge sayde: Make haist, and take (as thou hast sayde) the rayment and the horse, and do even so with Mardocheus & Jewe that sitteth before the kynges gate, and let nothinge sayle of all that thou hast spoken. Then toke Aman the rayment and the horse, and arayed him, and broughte him on horsebacke thorow the strete of the cite, and proclaimed before him: Euen thus shal it be done vnto enery man whom the kynge is disposed to honoure. And Mardocheus came agayne to the kynges gate, but Aman gat him home in all the haist, mournynge with bare heade, and tolde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes, enery thyng that had happened him. Then sayde his wise men and Seres his wyfe vnto him: If it be Mardocheus of the seide of the Jewes, before whom thou hast begonne to fall, thou canst do nothinge vnto him, but shalt fall before him. Whyle they were yet talkynge with him, came the kynges chamberlaynes, and caused Aman to make haist to come vnto the banquet that Hester had prepared.

The VII. Chapter.

A And whan the kynge and Aman came to the banquet that quene Hester had prepared, the kynge sayde vnto Hester on the seconde daye whan he had dyed wyne: What is thy petition quene Hester, that it maye be geuen the? And what request thou? See are even halfe of the empyre, and it shal be done. Hester & quene answered and sayde: If I haue founde grace in thy sighte (O kynge) and yf it please the kynge, then graunte me my lyfe at my desyre and my people for my petitions sake: for we are solde to be destroyed, to be slayne, and to perishe. And wolde God we were solde to be bondmen and bondwomen, then wolde I holde my conge, so shulde not the enemye be so hye to the kynges harme. The kynge Abasuerus spake & saide vnto quene Hester: What is he that? Or where is he & darre presume in his mynde to do soch a thinge after that maner? Hester sayde: The enemye and aduersary is this wicked Aman.

As for Ama, he was exceedingly a fraied before & kynge & & quene. And the kynge arose fro the banquet & fro & wyne in his displeasure, and wente in to the palace garden. And Aman stode vp, and besoughte quene Hester for his life: for he sawe & there was a mischaunce prepared for him of the kynge already.

And whan the kynge came agayne out of the palace garden in to & parler where they had eaten, Aman had layed him vpon the bed that Hester sat vpon. Then saide the kynge: Wyl he force the quene also besyde me in the house? As soone as that worde wente out of the kynges mouth, they covered Amans face. And Harbona one of the chamberlaynes that stode before the kynge, sayde Beholde, there stondech a galowe in Amans house fiftie cubytes hye, in which he had made for Mardocheus, that spake good for & kynge. The kynge sayde: Hange him theron. So they hanged Aman on the galowe that he had made for Mardocheus. Then was the kynges wrath styllled.

The VIII. Chapter.

The same daye dyd kynge Abasuerus geue the house of Aman the Jewes enemye, vnto quene Hester. And Mardocheus came before & kynge: for Hester tolde how that he beloged vnto her. And the kynge put of his synger rynge, which he had taken from Aman, & gaue it vnto Mardocheus. And Hester set Mardocheus ouer the house of Aman. And Hester spake yet more before the kynge, and fell downe at his feet, & besought him, that he wolde put awaye the wyckednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against & Jewes. And the kynge helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kynge, and sayde: If it please the kynge, and yf I haue founde grace in his sight, & yf it be conuenient for the kynge, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be wyttē, & the letters of the deuycce of Ama the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, maie be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroye & Jewes in all & kynges lodes. For how can I se the euell that shal happē vnto my people: and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynned?

Then sayde þe kynge Abasuerus vnto queene Hester, and to Mardocheus the Jewe: Beholde, I haue geuen Hester the house of Aman, and him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed hāde vpon þe Jewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Jewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with þe kynges ryng (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in þe kynges name, and sealed with the kynges ryng, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges scribes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Siuan, on the thre and twentieth daie.

C And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus commaunded) vnto the Jewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaines in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundred and seven and twentye londes, vnto every one acordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto every people after their speche, and to the Jewes acordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kynge Abasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges ryng. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the kynge graunted the Jewes (in what cities so euer they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote out, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with childien and women, and to spoyle their goode vpon one daie in all the londes of kynge Abasuerus, namely vpon the thirtieth daie of the twelveth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.

D The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a commaundement geuen in all londes to be published vnto all the people, that þe Jewes shulde be ready agaynst that daie to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made haste with all speede, acordinge to the kynges worde: and the commaundement was deuysed in the castell of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kynge in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate crowne of golde, beyng arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and þe cite of Susan reioysed and was glad: but vnto the Jewes there was come light and gladnesse, and ioye and worshippe. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and commaundement reached, there was ioye and myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Jewes: in so much that many of the people in the londe became of the Jewes beleue, for the feare of the Jewes came vpon them.

The ix. Chapter.

In the twelveth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thirtieth daie, which the kynges worde and commaundement had appoynted, that it shulde be done, euē vpon þe same daie þe enemies shulde haue destroyed the Jewes to haue oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euē þe Jewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the Jewes together in their cities within all þe londes of kynge Abasuerus, to laye honde on soch as wolde do the euell, and no man coulde withstonde them: for yf feare of the was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the kynge promoted the Jewes: for the feare of Mardocheus came vpon the. For Mardocheus was grete in the kynges house, and the repute of him was noised in all lodes, how he increased and grewe.

Thus the Jewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, and dyd after their wyll vnto soch as were their aduersaries. And at yf castell of Susan slewe the Jewes and destroyed fyue hundred men: and slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspachtha, Poiatha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmashta, Arissai, Aridai, Daiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman yf sonne of Amadathi þe enemye of the Jewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kynge certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the castell of Susan. And the kynge sayde vnto queene Hester: The Jewes haue slayne and destroyed fyue hundred men at yf castell of Susan, and the ten sonnes of Ama: What shal they do in the other londes of yf kynge? What is thy petition, that it maye be geuen the? and what requirest thou more to be done? Hester sayde: If it please the kynge, let him suffre the Jewes tomorrow also to do acordinge vnto this dayes commaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten sonnes vpon yf tre. And the kynge charged to do so, and the commaundement was deuysed at Susan, and Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the Jewes gathered the selues together at Susan, vpon the fourteenth daie of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundred men at Susan, but on their goodes they layed no handes.

As for the other Jewes in the kynges londes, they came together, and stode for their lyues, and gatt rest fro their enemies: and slewe

of their enemies fyue and seventye thousande, howbeit they layed no bondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirteth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourtenth daie of the same moneth rested they, which (daie) they ordeyned to be a daie of feastinge and gladnesse. But the Jewes at Susan were come together both on the thirtenth daie and on the fourtenth, and on the fiftenth daie they rested, and the same daie ordeyned they to be a daie of feastinge and gladnes. Therfore the Jewes that dwelt in the vyllages and unwalled townes, ordeyned the fourtenth daie of the moneth Adar, to be a daie of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

D And Mardocheus wrote these actes, and sent the writings vnto all the Jewes that were in all the landes of kynge Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourtenth and fiftenth daie of the moneth Adar, as the daies wherein the Jewes came to rest from their enemies, and as a moneth wherein their payne was turned to ioye, and their sorowe in to prosperite: that they shulde obserue the same as daies of wealch and gladnes, and one to sende giftes vnto another, and to distribute vnto the poore.

And the Jewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the sonne of Amadathai all the Jewes enemye, had deuysed to destroye all the Jewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to brynge them to naughte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuycce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Jewes) might be turned vpon his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daie Purim after the name of the lot, accordynge to all the wordes of this wrytinge: and what they themselves had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

them and their sede, and vpon all soch as loyned themselves vnto them, that they wolde not mysse to obserue these two daies yearly, accordynge as they were wrytten and appoynted, how the these daies are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amonge all kynreds in all landes and cities. They are the daies of Purim, which are not to be ouerslipte amonge the Jewes, and the memoriall of them oughte not to perishe from their sede.

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardocheus the Jewe, wrote with all auctorite, to confirme this seconde wrytinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the Jewes in the hundred and seven and twenty landes of the empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these daies of Purim, in their tyme appoynted, accordynge as Mardocheus the Jewe and Hester the quene had ordeined concerninge them: lyke as they vpon their soule and vpon their sede had confirmed the actes of the fastinges and of hir cōplaine. And Hester cōmaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a booke. Heb. 4. 8

The X. Chapter.

Ald the kynge Ahasuerus layed tribute vpon the londe, and vpon the Isles of the See. As for all the worke of his power and auctorite, and the greate worshippe of Mardocheus, which the kynge gaue him, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Media and Persia. For Mardocheus the Jewe was the seconde nexte vnto kynge Ahasuerus, and greate amonge the Jewes, and accepted amonge the multitude of his brethren, as one that seeketh the welch of his people, and speaketh the best for all his sede.

The first Chapter.

In the lode of thus there was a man called Job: an innocent and vertuous man, soch one as feared God, and eschued euell. This man had viij. sonnes, and iij. doughters. His substaunce was viij. M. shepe, iij. M. camels, v. C. yock of oxen, v. C. she asses, and a very greate housholde: so yf he was one of the most principall men amonge all them of the east countre. His sonnes now wente on every man, and made banderces: one daye in one house, another daye in another, and sent for their iij. sisters, to eate and drinke with them. So when they had passed over the tyme of their banderettinge rounde aboute, Job sent for them, and clensted them agayne, stode vpe early, and offred for every one a bretofferinge. For Job thought thus: peradventure my sonnes haue done some offence, and haue bene vnthankfull to God in their hertes. And thus dyd Job euery daye.

The booke of Job.

Now upon a tyme, when the seruantes
of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comdest thou? Sathan answered the LOR-DE, and sayde: I haue gone aboute the lode, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: hast thou not considered my seruant Job, how that he is an innocēt and vertuous mā: soch
one as feareth God, and eschuech euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? Sa-than answered, and sayde vnto the LORDE:
Doth Job feare God for naught? hast thou not preserved him, his house, and all his substance on every syde? hast thou not blessed the workes of his bondes? Is not his possession encreased in the londe? But laye thine honde vpon him a litle, touch once all that he hath, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: lo
all that he hath, be in thy power: only vpon himself se that thou laye not thine honde.
Then wente Sathan forth from the LORDE.

Now upon a certayne daye when his son-nes and doughters were eatinge, and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, the re came a messaunger vnto Job, and sayde:
Whyle the oxen were a plowinge, and the Asses goinge in the pasture besyde them: the Sabees came in violēcy, and toke them all awaye: yee they haue slayne the seruantes with the swearde, and I only ranne my wa-ye, to tell the.

And whyle he was yet speakyng, there came another, and sayde: The fyre of God is fallen from heauen, it hath consumed 2 brēt vp all the shepe and seruantes: and I only ranne my waye, to tell the. In the meane season whyle he was yet speakinge, there came another, and sayde: The Caldees made thre armies, and fell in vpon the camels, which they haue caried awaye, yee and slayne the seruantes with the swearde: and I only am gottē awaye, to tell the. Whyle he was speakinge, there came yet another, and sayde: Thy sonnes and doughters were eatinge and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, and sodenly there came a mightie greate wynde out off the South, and smote the iiii. corners of the house: which fell vpon thy children, so that they are deed: and I am gotten awaye alone, to tell the.

Then Job stode vp, and rente his clothes shaved his heade, fell downe vpon the groude, worshipped, and sayde: Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall

Turne thither agayne. The LORDE gaue, and the LORDE hath taken awaye (the LOR-DE hath done his pleasure) now blessed be y name off the LORDE. In all these thinges dyd Job not offende, ner murmured foolishly agaynst God.

The II. Chapter.

It happened also upon a tyme, that when the seruantes of God came 2 stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him.
And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan:
From whence comdest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: I haue gone aboute the lōde, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan:
Hast thou not considered my seruant Job,
how that he is an innocent 2 vertuous man
soch one as feareth God, and eschuech euell,
and that there is none like him in the londe?
But thou moudest me agaynst him, to pu-nyshe him: yet is it in wayne, for he continueth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde:
Stynne for stynne: yee a man will gene all y
euē he hath, for his life. But laye thine hon-de vpon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LOR-DE, and smote Job with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the foete vnto his crow-ne: so that he sat vpon the grounde in the ashes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife vnto him: Dost thou yet cōtynue in thy perfectnesse? curse God, 2
dye. But Job sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish womā. Seinge we haue recea-ued prosperite at the honde of God, wherfore shulde we not be content with aduersite also? In all these thinges, dyd not Job synne with his lippes.

Now when Jobs frendes herde of all y trouble, that happened vnto him, there camethre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphaz the Themanite, Balbad the Subite, and Sophar the Na-mathite.

For they were agreed together to come,
to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they lifte vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

The booke of Job.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and spryncled dust vpon their heades in the ayre. They sat them downe by him also vpon the ground, viij. dayes and viij. nightes. Neither was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

The III. Chapter.

Simile
Iere. 20. d

When this opened Job his mouth, and cursed his daye, and sayde: lost be that daye, wherein I was borne: and the night, in the which it was sayde: there is a man child conceived. The same daye be turned to darcknesse, and not regarded of God from above, nether be shyned vpon wth light: but be couered with darcknesse, and the shadowe of death. Let the dynne cloude fall vpon it, and let it be lapped in with sorrow. Let the darck storme overcome y^e night, let it not be reckened amonge the dayes off the year, ner counted in the monethes. Despyed be that night, and discommended: let them that curse the daye, geue it their curse also, euen those that be readye to raise vp Leuiathan. Let the starres be dynne thorow darcknesse of it. Let it loke for light, but let it see none, nether the rysynge vp of the fayre mornynge: because it shut not vp the wombe that bare me, ner hyd these sorowes from myne eyes.

B Alas, why dyed I not in y^e byrth? Why dyd not I perysh, as soone as I came out of my mothers wombe? Why see they me vpon y^e ir knees? Why gaue they me suck with their brestes? Then shulde I now haue lyen still, I shulde haue slepte, and bene at rest: like as the kynge and lordes of y^e earth, which buyde them silues speciall places: As the princes that haue greate substance of golde, and their houses full of syluer. O that I utterly had no beyng, or were as a thynge borne out of tyme (that is put asyde) ether as yonge children, which neuer sawe the light. There must the wicked ceasse from their tyranny, there such as are ouerlaboured, be at rest: there are those letten out fre, which haue bene in prison, so that they heare nomore the voyce of the oppressoure: There are small and greate: the bonde man, and he that is fre fro his master.

Wherefore is the light genen, to him that is in mysery? and life vnto them, that haue heuy herres? (Which longe for death, and it cometh not: for yf they might fynde the ir graue, they wolde be maruelous glad, as those that dygge vp treasure) To the man whose waye is hyd, which God kepech backe from him.

This is the cause, that I syghe before I eate, and my roarynges fall out like a water floude. For the thyng that I feared, is come vpon me: and the thyng that I was afrayed of, is happened vnto me. Was I not happy? Had I not quyetnesse? Was I not in rest? And now cometh such mysery vpon me.

The III. Chapter.

When answered Eliphas of Theman and sayde vnto him: If we begynne to comon with the, peraduenture thou wilt be myscontent, but who can witholde himself from speakyng? Beholde, thou hast bene a teacher of many, and hast comforted the weary bondes.

Thy wordes haue set vp those that were fallen, thou hast refreshed the weake knees. But now that the plage is come vpon the, thou shrčekst awaye: now that it hath touched thy self, thou art faine harred. Where is now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy patience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? Considre (I praye the) who euer peryshed, beynge an innocent? Or, when were the godly destroyed? As for those that plowe wickednesse (as I haue sene myself, and sowe myscheffe, they reape y^e same. For whē God bloweth vpon them, they perysh, and are destroyed thorow the blast of his wrath. The roaryng of the lyon, the cryenge off the lyoness, and y^e ceth off y^e lyons whelpes are bren. The grea- re lyon perysheth, because he can get no pray and the lyons whelpes are scatred abroad.

There is spoken vnto me a thyng in coun- cell, which hath genen a terrible sounde in myne eare, with a vision in the night, when men are fallen a slepe. Such feare and drede came vpon me, that all my bones shoke. And when the wynde passed ouer by me, the hayres of my flesh stode vp.

Then stode there one before me, whose face I knewe not: an ymage there was, and the wether was still, so that I herde this voyce: Maye a man be iustified before God? Maye there eny man be indged to be cleane, by reason of his owne workes? Beholde, he hath founde vn saythfulnesse amonge his owne seruautes, and proude disobedience amonge his angels.

The V. Chapter.

Ame me one els, yf thou canst fynde eny: yee loke aboute the, vpon eny of the holymen. As for the foolish man displeasure kylleth him, and anger slayeth yf ignorant. I haue sene my self, when the foolish was deperored, that his betty was sodely destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the doore, and no mā to delyner them: that his haruest was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weapened man had spoyled it, and that the thurstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth trauayle, nether commeth sorow out of yf ground: but it is man, that is borne vnto misery, like as the byrde for to fle.

But now will I speake of the LORDE, and talke of God: which doeth thinges, that are vnsearchable, and marueles without nō bie: Which geueth rayne vpo the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which setteth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prosperite, to those that are in heuynesse: Which destroyeth the deuycies of the sorcyl, so that they are not able to perfourme the thynges that they take in hōde: which compasseth yf wyse in their owne craftynesse, and euertroweth the counsell of the wicfed: In so much that they runne in to darcknesse by sayre daye, and grope aboute them at the noone daye, like as in the nyght.

Psal. 10. 2 And so he delynereth the poore from the swearde, from their mouth, and from the hōde of the cruell: that the poore maye haue hope, & that the mouth of the oppresseure maye be stopped.

CBehelde, happie is the man, whom God panysheth: therfore, despyse not thou yf chastenynge of the Almighty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medecyne agayne: though he smyte, his honde maketh whole agayne.

He delynereth the out of sixe troubles, so that in the seventh there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of hunger he sancteth yf from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

The vi. Chap.

He shall kepe the from the perlon's tonge so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nederto feare. In destruccion and deth thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afrayed for the beastes of the earth: But the castles in the londe shal be confederate with the, & the beastes of the felde shall geue the peace: Psal. 90

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge place shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy substance, and be nemoie punysched for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shali encrease, and that thy posterite shalbe as the graspe vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy grane in a sayre age, like as yf come sheeues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues haue proued by experience. Therfore now that thou hearest it, take better hede to thy self.

The VI. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: O that my misery were weyed, and my punyschement layed in the balaunces: for then shulde it be heuyer, then the sonde of the see. This is the cause, that my wordes are so sofull.

For the almighty hath shott at me with his arrowes, whose indignacion hath droncke vp my sprete, and yf terrible feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse reare when he hath grasse? Or crieth the ore, when he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thyng be eaten vnseasoned, or without salt? What raist hath yf a hyte within the yefe an egg? The thinges that sometyme I might not a waye withall, are now my meate for very sorow. O that I might haue my desyre: O yf God wolde graunte me the thyng, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smyte me: that he wolde let his honde go, & her me downe. The shulde I haue seme cōfession: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst yf wordes of the hely one.

What power haue I to endure? Or: what is myne ende, that my soule might be paciēt? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or, is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to helpe my self? Is not my strength gone fro me, like as yf one withdrawe a good rede from his frende, and forsake the feare of God? Myne owne brethern passe ouer by me as the water broke, that hastily runneth thow yf valleys. But they that feare the horsest, the snowe shal fall vpon them. Ela. 66. 2

The booke of Job.

When their tyme cometh, they shalbe destroyed and perishe: and when they be set on fyre, they shalber. moued out of their place. for the pathes yf they go in, are croked: they haist after vayne thinges, and shal perish. Considre the pathes off Theman, & the wayes off Saba, wherein they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny confidence in them: for whē they came to opteyne the thynges that they looked for, they were brought to confusion.

¶ Euen so are ye also come vnto me: but now that ye see my mysery, ye are afayed. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to geue me eny off youre substance? To deliuer me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tonge: and yf I do erre, shew me wherein.

Wherefore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken? which of you can reprove them? Sayenge only that ye are sorryll to cheeke mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse, and go aboute to ouerthrowe youre owne frende. Wherefore loke not only vpon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I lye, or no. Turne into youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferēt iudges, and considre myne vnayltnesse: whether there be eny vnrightheousnesse in my tonge, or vayne wordes in my mouth.

The VII. Chapter.

21 Not the life off mā vpon earth a very batayle? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an hyred seruaunt? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyreth the shadowe, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I laboured whole monethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull night haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: O when shal I ryse? Awayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be darcke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthynesse and dust: my slymme is wythered, and crumpled together: my dayes passe ouer more speedely, thē a weener can weene out his webbe, and are gone, or I am awarre. Remember, that my life is but a wynde, and that myne eye shal nemoze see the pleasures thereof yee and that none other mans eye shall see me eny more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to nought. like as a cloude is consumed and vanyshed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne into his house, nether shall his place knowe him eny more.

Wherefore I will not spare my mouth, but will speake in the tremble of my sprete, in yf bytternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a scear or a whalsysh, that thou kepest me so in prison? When I thynke, my bedd shall comforte me, I shall haue some refreshinge by talkynge with my self vpon my couche: The troublest thou me with dreames, and makest me so afayed therewith visions, that my soule wyssheth rather to be hanged, and my bones to be dedd.

I can see no remedy, I shall lye nemoze: Spare me then, for my dayes are but vayne. What is man, that thou hast hym in secke reputation, and settest somoch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and so dely dceest thou trye him.

Why gcest thou not from me, ner lettest me alone, so longe till I swallow downe my spetle? I haue offēded, what shal I do vnto yf, O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so heavy a burden vnto myself? Why doest thou not forgue me my synne? Wherefore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yff thou settest me to morow in the momynge, I shalbe gone.

The VIII. Chapter.

22 Then answered Baldad the Subite, and sayde: How longe wilt thou talke of soch thinges? how longe shal yf mouth speake so proude wordes? Dost thou peruerter the thinge that is lawfull? Or, doth the Almighty destroye the thinge that is right? Whē thy sonnes synned agaynst him, dyd not he punyssh the for their wickednesse? Wilt thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes, and make thine humble prayer to yf Almighty: yf thou woldest lye a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediatly, & geue the the bewtie of righteousness agayne? In so moch, that where i so euer thou haddest litle afore, thou shuldest now haue greate abundaunce. Enquere of them that haue bene before the, search diligently amonge thy forefathers: Namely, yf we are but of yesterdays, and considre not, that oure dayes vpon earth are buth a very shadow. The booke of Job.

Maye a reffhe be grene without moyfneffe: maye the grasse growe without water: No: but (or euer it be shot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before eny other herbe. Euen so goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus also shal the ypocrytes hope come to naught. His confidence shalbe destroyed, for he trusteth in a spyders webbe.

He leeneth him vpo his house, but he shal not stonde: he holderh him fast by it, yet shal
he not endure. Of tymes a thinge doth flourish, and men thynke that it maye abyde
the Sonnes hyne: it shuterh forth the braunches in his garden, it taketh many rotes, in so moch that it is like an house off stones.
But yf it be taken out off his place, every man denyeth it, sayenge: I knowe the not.
Lo, thus is it wth him, that reioyseth in his owne doinges: and as for ether, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not cast away a ver-tuous man, nether wil he helpe the vngedly.
Thy mouth shal he fyll with laughynge, ad thy lippes with gladnesse. They that hate the, shalbe confounded, & y^e dwellinges of y^e vngedly shal come to naught.

The IX. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: As for y^e
I knowe it is so of a truth, y^e a man compared vnto God, can not be iusti-fied. If he wil argue with him, he shal not be able to answer him vnto one amonge a thousande. He is wyse of hert, and mightie in strength. Who euer prospered, that toke parte agaynst him? He tranlateth the meicyay-nes, or euer they be avarre, & overthioweth them in his wrath. He remoneth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers shake with-
all. He commaundeth the Sone, & it ryseth not: he closeth vp the starres, as it were vnder a signet. He himself alone spredeth out y^e heauens, and goeth vpon the waves of the
see. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the + vy. starres and the secrete places of the south. He doth greate thinges, soch as are vnsearcheable, yee and wonders without nombre.

If he came by me, I might not loke vpo him: yf he wente his waye, I shulde not per-ceiue it. If he be haisty to take eny thinge awaye, who wil make him restore it agayne?
Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou?
He is God, whose wrath no man maye with-stode: but the proudest of all must stoupe vnder him. How shulde I then answer him: or,

The ix. Chap.

what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yet though I be righteous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely submytte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, y^e he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my spere be in rest, but fylleth me wth byternesse.

If men will speake of strength, he is the strongest of all: yf me will speake of rightous-nes, who darre be my recorder: yf I will iusti-fie my self, myne owne mouth shal cōdemne me: yf I will put forth my self for a perfecte man, he shal proue me a wicked doer: For that I shulde be an innocent, my cōscience knoweth it not, yee I myself am weery off my life.

This one thinge wil I saye: He destroyeth both the righteous & vngedly. And though he slaye suddenly wth the scourge, yet laugheth he at the punishment of the innocent. As for the wilde, he geueth it over into the power of the wicked, soch as the rulers be, wher of all londes are full. Is it not so? where is there eny, but he is soch one?

My dayes haue bene more swifte, then a runner: they are gone sodenly, and haue sene no good thinge. They are passed awaye, as the shippes that be good vnder sale, and as the Aegle that haisteth to the pray. When I am purposed to forget my complayninges to chaunge my countenaunce, and to cōfor-te my self: then am I afrayed of all my wor-kes, for I knowe, thou fauourest not an euill doer. If I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I washed my self with snewe water, and made myne hon-des neuer so cleane, yet shuldest thou dyppe me in y^e myre, & myne owne clothes shulde defyle me. For he y^e I must geue answer vnto, and with whom I go to lawe, is not a man as I am. Neither is there eny dayes man to reproue both the partes, or to laye his hōde betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye from me, yee let him make me no more afrayed of him, and then shal I answer him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in soch fearefulnesse, I can make no answer: And why? it greueth my soule to lyue.

B Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylke: and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with sayme and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes. Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent hede that thou tookest vpon me, hath preserved my spere.

Though thou hydest these thinges in thine hert, yet am I sure, that thou rememberest the all. Wherfore didest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not cleansed me from myne offence? If I do wickedly, wo is me therfore: If I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and of myne owne misery.

C Thou huntest me out (beyng in heynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bingest fresh witnessses agaynst me, thy wrath increaseth thou vpon me, very many are the plagues that I am in. Wherfore hast thou brought me out of my mothers wombe? The XL Chapter.

A Then answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered?

Shulde he that babbleth much, be commended therein? Shulde men geue eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne? Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am clene in thy sight? O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secreete wysdome) how many folde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou fynde out God with thy sekynge? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Almightye? He is hyer the heauē, what wilt thou do? Deper the hall, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceedeth the length of the earth, and his bredth yf bredth of the see. Though he turne all thinges vpsyde downe, close them in, or thrust the together, who darre ched him therfore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seeth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then conside it? A wayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wyld assesse foale. If thou haddest now a right herte, & liftest vp thine hondes to ward him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynnesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, the shuldest thou be sure, and haue no need to feare.

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thynke nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shulde thy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the momynge. Then mightest thou haue comfort, in the hope that thou hast: & slepe quyetly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and nomore to make the a frayd, yee many one shulde see much by the. As for the eyes of the vngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape: their hope shal be misery and sorow of mynte.

The XII. Chapter.

S O Job answered, and sayde: Then (no doute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perissh with you. But I haue vnderstandinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Rec who knoweth not these thinges? Thus he that calleth vpo God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neighbours: the godly & innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynnesse is a lichte despysed in yf bertes of the rich, & is set forthem to stumple vpon.

The booke of Job.

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, & they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geuech all thinges richely with his honde.

B Are the catell, & they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shal tell y: Speake to the earth, and it shal shewe the: Or to the ffishes of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that yf hōde of the LORDE made all these? In whose honde is the soule of euery lyuynge thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, and the mouth in tastinge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde personnes there is wysdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstōdinge. Rec with God is wysdome and strength, it is he that hath counsell & forknowledge. If he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? If he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, yf he witholde the waters, they drye vp: If he let the go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wysdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wyse men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wyttes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kyn- ges, and gyrdeth their loynes with a bonde. He ledeth awaye the prestes into captiuyte, and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. He taketh the verite from out of the mouth, & disapoynteth yf aged of their wysdome. He poureth out confusion vpon prynces, and cōforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Like what lyeth hyd in darcknesse, he declareth it opely: and the very shadowe of death bryngeth hē to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: He maketh them to multiplie, and dryueth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kyn- ges of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wādinge out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stād' erun- geto and fro like dionden men.

Thynke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Pun- nysh you shal he and reprieue you, yf ye do secretly accepte any personne. Shal he not make you a frayed, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpo you? you re remembraunce shalbe like the dust, & you re pryde shalbe turned to claye.

Holde youre tonges now, and let me spea- ke, for there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherfore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cōforte ner hope for me, yf he wil slaye me. But yf I shewe and reprieue myne owne wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why? there maye no Apocrite come before him, heare my wor- des, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. Beholde, though sentence were geuen v- pon me, I am sure to be knowne for vngilty. What is he, that will go to lawe with me? For yf I holde my tounge, I shal dye. Neuer thelesse graunte me ij. thinges, and then will I not hyde my self from the.

Withdraue thine honde from me, & let not the fearfull drede of the make me a frayed. And then sende for me to the lawe, yf I maye answere for my self: els, let me speake, and geue thou the answer. How greate are my mysdedes & synnes? Let me knowe my tras- gressions & offences. Wherfore hyd'st thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemye? Wilt thou be so cruell & extreme vnto a flyen- ge leafe, and selewe vpon drye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt utterly vnde me, for yf synnes of my youth? Thou hast put my fete in the stocks: thou ledest narrowly vnto all my pathes, & mar- kest the stepes of my fete: where as I (net- withstandinge) must consume like as a seale carion, and as a cloth that is mothe eaten.

B If a tre be cutt downe, there is seme hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the braunches againe: For though a roce be war en olde and deed in the ground, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and brynge forth bowes, like as when it was first planteed. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? The floudes when they be dried vp, & the ryuers when they be emptye, are fylled agayne thow the flowinge waters of the see: but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, untill the heauen perishe: he shal not wake vp ner rise out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, untill thy wiaht were stilled: & to ap poynte me a tyme, wherein thou mightest remembre me. Maye a deed man lyue agayne? All the dayes of this my pilgremage am I lokyng, when my chaunginge shal come. If thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeye the: only despyse not the worke of thine owne hondes.

C For thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be notthouto exteme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their place, the waters pearse thow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes washe awaye the grauell & earth: Euen so destroye I thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou picua y lest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chauntest his estate, and puttest him from the. ownemouth condemneth the, and not I: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answer. Art thou the first man, that ever was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secrete councell of God, that all wysdome is to litle for y? What knowest thou, yf we knowe not? What vnderstandest thou, but we can the same? With vs are olde and aged men, yee soch as haue lyued longer then thy foresathers.

Dost thou nemoie regarde the comfoite of God? but thy wicked wordes wil not suffre the. Why doth thine herte make the so proude? Why stondest thou so greatly in thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, yf thy mynde is so puffed vp agaynst God & lettest soch wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vncleane? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amonge his owne sanctes: yee the very hea uens are vncleane in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryncketh wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewe the a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, & hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the londe was geuen, that no straunger shulde come amonge them.

The vngodly dyspayeth all the dayes of his life, & the nombre of a cryauntes yeares is vnknowne. A fearfull sounde is euer in his eares, & when it is peace, yet feareth he destruction: he belueth neuer to be deliuered out of darcknesse, the swearde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his lyuinge, he thinketh planely, that the daye of darcknesse is at honde. Sorow and carefulnesse make him a frayed, & compass him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost redy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, & armed himself agaynst y Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, & with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with facnesse, and maketh his body well lytynge. Therfore shall his dwellynge be in desolate cities, & in houses which no mā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones.

He shall not be rich, nether shall his substance continue, ner encrease vpon earth. He shal neuer come out of darcknesse, the flame shal drye vp his braunches, with y blast of the mouth of God shal he be tate awaye. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulness ner treuth, so sore is he disceined wth vanitie.

The XVI. Chapter.

J Ob answered, and sayde; I haue oft tymes herde such thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy wayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet any more to saye? I coude speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with y talkinge of my lypes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorrow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tonge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (wherof my wryncles beare wytnesse) there stodeh vp a dyssembler to make me answer with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnaseth vpon me with his teeth. Myne enemy srowleth vpon me with his eyes.

What helpeth then my longe tarienge? Or, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe into the pytt, & lye with me in the dust.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Z en answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of yonre wordes? Marcke well, and confidre, we wil speake also. Wherfore are we counted as bestes, & reputed so vile in youre sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal y earth be forsaken, or the stonnes removed out of their place because of y? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yet the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shal be darcke in his dwellinge, & his candle shal be put out with him. His presumptuous goinges shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shal be taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His fete shal be holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pytt fall in the waye.

The booke of Job.

B Fearfulnesse shall make him a frayd on e-uery syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Hunger shall be his substaunce, and my fortune shall hange vpon him. He shall eate his owne slayne, yee his owne armes shall he deuoure, beyng a firstborne of death. All his comforte and hope shall be rote-d out of his dwellinge, very fearfulnesse shall brynge him to the kynge. Other men shall dwell in his house (which now is none of his)
and brymstone shall be scatered vpon his ha-bitacion. His rotes shall be dryed vp beneath, z above shall his harvest be cut downe. His remembraunce shall perish from the earth, z
his name shall not be prayd in the stretes:
he shall be dryen from the light into darcknesse, and be cast clene out of the worlde. He shall nether haue children ner kynsfolkes amonge his people, no ner eny posterite in his countre: yonge z olde shall be astonysed at his death. Soch are now the dwellinges of the wicked, and this is y place of him that knoweth not God. The XIX. Chap.

A In answered, z sayde: How longe wil ye vex my mynde, z trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes haue ye repro-ued me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me so to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce yo selues a-gaynst me, z accuse me to be a wicked person because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowethis then, y it is God, which hath handled me so violently, z hath compased me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I crie, yet violence is done vnto me, I can not be herde: Though I complaine, there is none to geue sentence with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I ca not get awaye, he hath set darknesse in my gate.

B He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, z taken the crowne awaye from my heade. He hath destroyed me on euery syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucte vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His mon of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. He hath put my brethren farre awaye from me, and soch as we re of myne acquaintaunce, are become straūgers vnto me. Myne owne kynsfolkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembraunce. The seruantes and may-dens of myne owne house take me for a straū-ger, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sight.

The xx. Chap. Fo. vi.

When I call vpon my seruant, he geneth me no answer: no though I prae him with my mouth. Myne owne wyfe maye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake fayre vnto
the children of myne owne body. Yee the very deserte fooles despise me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me.
All soch as were my most familiars, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hanger to my slayn-ne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the slayne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes)
for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vex me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

That my wordes were witten, That they were put in a booke: wolde God they were graued w an yron pene in leade or in stone.
For I am sure, that my redemer lyueth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shall be clothed againe with this slayne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shall beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are consumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occasion agaynst him. But beware of the swear-de, for the swerde wyl be avenged of wickednesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The XX. Chapter.

In answered Sophar the Naama-thite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to an-swere. And why? my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the chedyn-ge z reprofe, therfore am I purposed to make answer after my vnderstodinge. A now se thou not this, namely: that frim the begynninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Apocrytes continued but y twinklinge of an eye: Though he be magnified vp to the heauē, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like donger. In somoch y they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he?
He vanysheth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, z passeth awaye as a vision in y night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth now no sight of him, z his place knoweth him nomore. His childre go a begginge, their handes bringe thē to sorow and heynesse.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce,
which shall lie downe w him in y earth. Whē

wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyll he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poyson of serpentes within his body. The riches yf he deuoureth, shall he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore sethe ryuers and brookes of hony and butter: But labour shal he, z yet haue nothinge to eat. Greate trauayle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coulde neuer be fylled, therfore shal he perish in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, yf he left nothinge behynde, therfore his goodes shal not prospere. Though he had plentyousnesse of euerythinge, yet was he poore, z therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

For though yf wicked haue neuer so moch to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne downe him: so that yf he fle the yron weapons, he shall be shot with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, z go out at his backe, and a glisteringe fireardethorow yf eall of him, feare shal come vpo him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnkyndled fyre shal consume him, and loke what remaineth in his house, it shall be destroyed. The heauen shal declare his wickednesse, z the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substaunce that he hath in his house, shalbe taken awaye and perishe, in the daye of the LORDES wrath. This is the percien that yf wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

The XXI. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende yo^r selues. Suffer me a litle, that I maye speake also, and the langh my wordes to some, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my spiete be the in sore trouble? Marke me well, be abashed, and laye youre hāde vpon your mouth. For whē I pōndre z considre this, I am afrayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. Wherfore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperice, come to their olde age, z increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, z their generacion before their eyes. Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte the. Their bullocke genbreth, and that not out of tyme: their cow calueth, and is not vnfructfull.

They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the daunce. They beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welchynesse: but suddenly they go downe to hell. They saye vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. What maner of felowe is the Almightye, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vterly no goodnesse in them, therfore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. How oft shal the candle of yf wicked be put out? how oft cometh their destruccion vpon them? On what sorowe shal God geue them for their parte in his wrath? Yee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

And though God saue their childre from soch sorowe, yet wil he so rewardethē selues, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearfull wrath of the Almighty. For what careth he, what becometh of his household after his death? whose monethes passe awaye swifter then an arrowe. In as moch the as God hath yf hyest power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth new when he is mightie z at his best, rich and in prosperice: euen when his bewels are at the fatteest, and his bones full of mary. Another dyeth in sorowe and heuynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, z the wormes couer them. But I knowe what yetthinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrightuously. For ye saye: where is the prynces palace? where is the dwellinge of the vngodly? Are eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will not regarde their tokens z dedes) he shal tell you, that the wicked is kept vnto the daye of destruccien, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reprove him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngaciousnesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his grave, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. The shal he be fayne to be buried amonge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, z there are innumerable gone before him. O how wayne is the comfoite yf ye geue me? Are not youre answers cleane contrary to right and trench?

The xxxij. Chap. Fo. vij.

21 S Eliphaz the Temanite gave an swere, & sayde: Maye a man be cōpa- red vnto God in wysdome, though he seme to himself, for to be like him? What pleasure hath God in y thou art righteous? Or what doth it profite him, y thy waies are perfecte? Is he afrayed to reprove the, & to steppe forth wth the into iudgment? Cometh not this for y greate wickednesse, & for thine vngacious dedes which are innumerable? Thou hast takē the pledge from thy brethē for naught, & robbed the naked of their clo- thinge: To such as were weery, hast thou ge- uē no water to drynke, thou hast withdrawē bierd frō the hungry: Shulde such one thē as vseth violēce, wrōge & oppiession (doinge all thinges of parcialyte, & hauyng respect of personnes) dwell in the lōde? Thou hast sent wyddowes awaye emptie and oppressed the poore fatherlesse.

22 Therefore art thou compased aboute with snares on every syde, & sodely vexed wth feare. Shuldest thou chē se no darcknesse? Shulde not the water floude runne ouer the? Now because y God is hyer thē the heauens, & be- cause thou seist y the starres are so hye, wilt thou therfore saye: Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? Tush, the cloudes couer him, y he maye not se, for he dwelleth in heauen. Well, thou wilt kepe the olde waye, y all wic- ked mē haue gone: both olde & yonge, whose foundacion is a runnyng water, which saye vnto God: go from vs, and after this maner: Tush, what wil the Almightye do vnto vs? where as he (not with stōdinge) fylleth their houses wth all good. Which meanynge of the vngodly be farre frome. For wth ioy shal the godly, and with gladnesse shal the innocent se, that their increase shal be hewen downe, & their posterite consumed with the fyre.

23 Therefore recōcile the vnto God, & be con- tent, so shal all thinges prospere wth the right well. Receaue the lawe at his mouth, & laye vp his wordes in thine herte. For yf thou wilt turne to the Almightye, thou shalt ston- de fast, & all vnrightheousnesse shall be farre from thy dwellinge: he shal geue the an har- uest, which in plenty & abundaunce shal ex- ceade the dust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like ryuer stones. Rece the Almightye his owne self shal be thine harnest, & the hea- pe of thy money. Then shalt thou haue thy delyte in the Almightye, & lift vp thy face vn- to God. Thē shalt thou make thy prayer vn- to him, & he shal heare the, & thou shalt kepe thy promyses. Thē, lēke what thou takest in honde, he shal make it to prospere with the, and the light shall shyne in thy wayes. For who so humbleth himself, him shal he set vp: and who so loketh metely, shal be healed. Yf thou be innocēt, he shal saue the: and thou wth the vngiltyneesse of thyne handes shalt thou be delyuered.

The XXIII. Chapter.

1 J Ob answered, and sayd: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heavy amonge my grominges. What I might se him & synde him: What I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes: That I might knowe, what an swere he wolde geue me: & that I might vn- derstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he pleate agaynst me with his greate power & strength, or will he leane him self vterly vpon me? Oh no, let him neede so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to la- we, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I synde him not: yf I come behynde, I cā get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pōndre his wor- tes, I cannot attayne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hyderh himself, yf I cannot se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: & trieth me as y golde in y fyre.

Nevertheless my fete kepe his path, his hye strece haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the cōmaundemēt of his lippes, but lōke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who w^{ll} turne him back: he doth as him listeth, and bryn- geth to passe what he wil. Herewardeth me into my bosome, & many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is y cause, that I shrenke at his ptesence, so that when I confidre him, I am afrayed of him. For in so moch as he is God, he maketh my herte so ft. and seynge that he is Almightye, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The XXIII. Chapter.

1 C Onsidringe then that there is no ty- me hyd from the Almightye, how hap- peneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? For some mē the- re be, that remoue other mē's lōde markes: that robbe them of their catell, and kepe the same for their owne: that dryue awaye the as- se of the fatherlesse: that take y wyddowes ore for a pledge: that thrust the poore out of the waye, & oppresse the symple of the worl-together. Beholde, the wilde asses in y^e deserte go by tymes (as their maner is) to spoyle: yee the very wilderness minisreth foode for their children. They reape the come felde that is not their owne: and gather the grapes out of his vynyarde, whom they haue oppressed by violence. They are the cause y^e so many men are naked and bare, hauinge no clothes to couer them and kepe them from colde: So that when the showers in the mountaynes haue rayned vpon them, &

they be all wet, they haue none other succorre, but to kepe them amonge the rockes.

They spoyle the suckinge fatherlesse children, and put the poore in prison: In so moch that they let them go naked without clothinge, and yet the hungrie beare the sheenes.
The poore are sayne to laboure in their oyle
mylles, yee and to treade in their wyne presses, and yet to suffre thys. The whole cre-atiō cryeth vnto the LORDE with sighinge, the soules of the slayne make their complaynte:
But God destroyeth them not for all this,
where as they (not wth stōdinge) are rebellious and disobedient enemies: which seeke not his light and waye, ner turne agayne into his path. Tymely in the mornynge do they ary-se, to murther the synple and poore, & in the night they go a stealinge.

The eye of the vngodly is like the aduoucerer, that wayeth for the darcknesse, and sayeth thus in him self: Tush, there shal no mā se me, & so he dysayseth his face. In the night season they search the houses, and hyde them selues in the daye tyme, but wil not knowe y^e light. For as soone as the daye breaketh, the shadowe of death cometh vpon them, and they go in horrible darcknesse. The vngodly is very swyfe: O y^e his porciō also vpon earth were swyfter then y^e runnyng water, which suffreth not y^e shipmā to beholde the saye & pleasaunt vynyardes. O y^e they (for the wickednesse which they haue done) were drawen to the hell, sooner then snowe melteth at the hea-
te. O y^e all cōpassion vpon the were forgottē:
y^e their daynties were womes: that they were clene put out of remembrance, & vterly hewē downe like an vnfrutefull tre. For they manteyne the baren, & make them y^e they can not beare, & vnto wyddowes they do no good. They plucke downe the mightie wth their power, & when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme penerte, & take out of the waye: yee & vterly plucke of as the eares of come. Is it not so? Who wil the reprove me as a lyar, & saye y^e my wordes are nothinge worth?

The XXV. Chapter.

Then answered Baldad the Suhite, & & sayde: Power & feare is with him above, that maketh peace (sittinge) in his hynesse, whose men of warre are immunerable, and whose light aryseth ouer all. But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be iusti-fied? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman? Beholde, the Moone shyneth no thinge in comparisō to him, & the starres are vncleane in his sight. How moch more the, mā, that is but corrupcion: and the sonne of man, which is but a worme?

The XXVI. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: O how helpest thou the weaker: what comforte gapest thou vnto him that hath no strength? Where is y^e cōcell y^e thou shuldest geue him, which hath no wysdome? Wilt thou so shewethine excellent righteousnes?
Before whom hast thou spoken these wor-des? Who made the breth to come out of y^e mouth? The giannes & worthies y^e are slay-ne, & lye vnder y^e wolde wth their cōpanions:
yee & all they which dwell beneth in the hell
are not hyd frō him, & the very destruccion it self cā not be kepte out of his sight. He strecheth out y^e north ouer the emptie, & hāgeth
y^e earth vpon nothinge. He byndeth y^e water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it cā not be sene, and spredeth his cloudes before it.

He hath cōpased the waters wth certayne boundes, vntill the daye & night come to an ende. The very pilers of heaue trēble & quake at his reprove. He stilleth the see with his power, & thorow his wysdome hath he set forth y^e wolde. With his spiete hath he garnished the heauē, & with his hande hath he wounded the rebellious serpent. This is now a shorte summe of his doynge. But who is able sufficiently to rehearse his workes?
Who can perceaue and vnderstande y^e thou dre of his power? The XXVII. Chap.

Job also proceeded and wote forth in his comunicacion, sayēge: As truly as God lyeth (which hath taken awaye my power from me) & the Allmightie, that hath vexed my mynde: My lippes shal talke of no vanite, and my tonge shal speake no disceate, whyle my breth is in me, and as longe as the wynde (that God hath geuen
me) is in my nostrils.

- Chap. ix. Amā's sonnes are hanged also, and many enemyes slayne. The Jewes kepe a ioyfull feast.
- Chap. x. Of the auctorite of Mardocheus vnder the kyng.

In the tyme of Ahasuerus, which reigned from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and seven and twenty londes, what tyme as he sat on his seate roiall in the castell of Susan in the thirde yeare of his reigne, he made a feast vnto all his prynces and seruantes, namely vnto the mightie men of Persia and Media, to the Debities and rulers of his countrees, that he mighte shewe the noble riches of his kyngdome, and the glorious worshippe of his greatnesse, many dayes longe, even an hundred and foure score dayes.

And whan these dayes were expyred, the kyng made a feast vnto all the people that were in the castell of Susan, both vnto grete and small, seven dayes longe in the court of the garden by the kynges palace: where there hanged whyte, reed & yalow clothes, fastened with coardes of linnen and scarlet in siluer rynges, vpon pylers of Marble stone.

The benches were of golde and siluer ma de vpon a pauement of grene, white, yalow and black Marble. And þe dunke was caried in vessels of golde, and there was ever chaunge of vessell. And the kynges wine was moche acordyng to the power of the kyng. And neman was appoynted what he shulde dunke: for the kyng had commaunded all the of ficers of his house, that every one shulde do as it lyked him. And the quene Vasthi made a feast also for the women in the palace of Ahasuerus. And on the seventh daye whan the kyng was mery of the wine, he commaunded Mehuman, Bistha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Sethar and Charcas, the seven chamberlaynes (that dyd seruyce in the presence of kyng Ahasuerus) to fetch the quene Vasthi with the crowne regall, that he might shewe þe people and prynces hir fautenesse: for she was bewtifull. But the quene Vasthi wolde not come at the kynges worde by his chamberlaynes. Then was the kyng very wroth, and his indignaciō kyndled in him.

And the kyng spake to þe wyse men that had vnderstondinge in the ordinaunces of the londe (for the kynges matters must be handled before all soch as haue knowlege of the lawe and iudgment: And the nexte vnto him were, Charsena, Sethar, Admatha, Tharsis, Meres, Marsena and Memuchan, the seven prynces of the persiās, and Meedes, which sawe the kynges face, and satt aboue in the kyngdome) What lawe shulde be execute vpon the quene Vasthi, because she dyd not acordyng to the worde of the kyng by his chamberlaines. The saide Memuchā before the kyng & the prynces: The quene Vasthi hath not onely done euell agaynst the kyng but also agaynst all the prynces and all the people in all the londes of kyng Ahasuerus for this dede of the quene shall come abroad vnto all women, so that they shall despyse their husbendes before their eyes, and shall saye: The kyng Ahasuers commaunded Vasthi & quene to come before him, but she wolde not. And so shall the pryncesses in Persia and Media saye lykewyse vnto all the kynges prynces, whan they heare of this dede of the quene, thus shall there aryse despyte fulnes and wrauth ynough. If it please the kyng, let there go a kyngly commaundment from him, and let it be wrytten acordyng to the lawe of the persians and Medians (and not to be transgressed) that Vasthi come nomore before kyng Ahasuerus, and let the kyng geue the kyngdome vnto another, that is better then she.

me not in all my conuersacion. Therefore my-ne enemy shalbe founde as the vngodly, z he y taketh parte agaynst me, as the vnrighteous. What hope hath y Xpocrite, though he haue greate good, and though God geue him riches after his hertes desyre? Doth God heare him the sooner, whē he crieth vnto him in his necessite? Hath he soch pleasure

name of God, z the thinge that I haue of y Allmightie, wil I not kepe from you. Beholde, ye stonde in yo^r owne conceite, as though ye knew all thinges. Wherfore then do ye go aboute wth soch vayne wordes, sayēge: This is the porcion that the wicked shal haue of God, z the heretage that Tyrantes shal receiue of y Allmightie. If he get many children, they shal perish wth the sward, z his posterite shal haue scarcenesse of bried. Loke whom he leaueth behinde him, they shal dye z be buried, z no man shal haue pite of his wyddowes. Though he haue as moch money as the dust of the earth, z raymēt as redy as the claye, he maye well prepare it: but the godly shal put it vpon him, and the innocēt shal deale out the money. His house shal endure as the moeth, z as a boche that the watchman maketh. When the rich man dyeth, he carieth nothinge with him: he is gone in y twynclynge of an eye. Destruction taketh holde vpon him as a water floude, z y tēpest stealeth him awaye in the night sea-

him not, he maye not escape from the power therof. Than clappemē their hōdes at him, yee and ieast of him, whē they loke vpon his ke what is pleasant, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greate floudes together, z the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to derstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she founde in the lode of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphirs maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden place. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as onct to be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome goeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cometh out of Jude, maye in no wyse be likened vnto

her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaunt

From whēce then cometh wysdome? z where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee z frō the foules of the ayre. Destruction z death saie:

B of oyle: when I wentethorow the cite vnto the gate, & when they set me a chayre in y^e streete: when the yonge men (as soone as they sawe me) hyd the selues, & when the aged arose, & stode vp vnto me: when the princes lef of the streete, & laied their hand to their mouth: when the mightie kepte still their voyce, and when their tonges clenched to the rof of their mouthes. When all they y^e herd me, called me happie: & when all they y^e sawe me, wysshed me good. For I delyned y^e poore when he cried, & the fatherlesse y^e wanted helpe. & c y^e shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good worde, & y^e widdowes bert pra. sed me. And why? I put vpon me righteuousnes, which couer. d me as a garnēt, & equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the llynde, & a foote to the lame. I was a father vnto the poore, & when I knewe not their cause. I sought it out diligētly. I brake the chafes of y^e vnrighuous, & plucketh the spoyle out of their teeth.

Gen. 14. c

Therfore, I thought verely, y^e I shulde haue dyed in my nest: & y^e my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spied out by the waters syde, & the deu laye vpo my coine. My hono^r encreased more & more, and my bowe was ener the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue eare, me they regarded, & w^o sylence they tar. ied for my coucell. If I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge the. They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: & gaped vpon me, as the groude doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knewe well it was not earnest: & this testimony of my countenance pleased the nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chiefe, & sat as a kynge amonge his seruantes: Was one that comforteth soch as be in heynesse. The XXX. Chapter.

Now they that are my inferiours & yonger then I, haue me in derision: yee euē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought scome to haue set w^o the dogges of my catell. The power & strength of their handes might do me no good, & as for their age, it is spēt & past awaye without eny profit. For very misery & hunger, they wente aboute in the wildernesse like wretches & beggers, pluckynge vp herbes from amonge the bushes, & the Jumperes rote was their meate. Fearfulnesse is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure vane shech awaye more swifely then wynde, & my prespente departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therfore is my mynde poured full of heynesse, & y^e dayes of trouble haue takē helde vpon me. My bones are peasied thorer in y^e night season, & my synnes take no rest. With all their penitence haue they chaunged my garnēt, & gyided me therewith, as it were w^o a ceate. I am euē as it were claye, & am become like as shyes & dust. When I crie vnto the, thou dost not heare me: & though I stande before the, yet thou regardest me not. Thou art become myne enemye, & w^o y^e violēt hande thou takest parte agaynst me. In tymes past thou didest set me vp an hye, as it were aboue y^e winde, but now hast thou geuen me a very seere fall. Sure I am, y^e thou wilt deliuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē lyvinge. Or, haue I sayde to the fynest golde of all: thou art my confidence? haue I reioysed because my substaunce was greate, and because my honde gat so moch? Dyd I ever greatly regarde the risinge of the Sonne? Or, had I the goinge downe of yf Moone in greate reputacion? hath my hert medled priuely wth eny disceate? Or, dyd I ever kysse myne owne honde (that were a wickednesse worthy to be punyshed, for then shulde I haue denyed the God that is aboue.) haue I ever reioysed at the hurte of myne enemy? I haue not suffered a straunger to lye wth out, but opened my doores vnto him. haue I ever done eny wicked dede where thorow I shamed myself before men? Or eny abominacion, yf I was sayne to hyde it? For yf I had feared eny greate multitude of people: Or yf I had bene dyspyed of yf symple, Wh then shulde I haue bene afrayed. Thus haue I quietly spent my lyfe, and not gone out at yf doore. What I had one which wolde heare me. Lo, this is my cause. Let yf Allmightie geue me answer: & let him that is my contrary party, sue me with a lybell. Then shal I take it vpon my shulder, & as a garlande aboute my heade. I haue tolde the nombre of my goinges, and deliuered them vnto him as to a prynce. Here ende the wordes of Job.

The XXXII. Chapter.

S O these thre men wolde stryue nomore wth Job, because he helde himself a righteous man. But Eliu the sonne of Barachel the Bussite of the kynred of Ram, was very sore displeased at Job, that he called himself iust before God. And with Jobs thre frendes he was angrie also, because they had founde no reasonable answer to overcome him. Now taried Eliu till they had ended their communicacion with Job, for why? they were elder then he. So when Eliu yf sonne of Barachel yf Bussite sawe, that these thre men were not able to make Job answer, he was myscontent: so that he gaue answer himself, and sayde: Consider me yf I am yonge, & ye be men of age, I was afrayed, & durst not shewe forth my mynde, for I thought thus within myself: It becometh olde men to speake, & the aged to teach wysdome. Every mā (no doute) hath a mynde, but it is the inspyracion of the Allmightie that geueth vnderstandinge. All men are not wyse, nether doth every aged man vnderstande the thinge that is lausfull. Therfore wil I speake also (in so farre as I maye be heard) & wil shewe yow myne opinyon. For whē I had wayted till ye made an ende of youre talkynge, & herde youre wysdome, what argu-mentes ye made in youre communicacion:

yee when I had diligently pondred what ye sayde, I founde not one of you that made eny good argument agaynst Job, or that directly coude make answer vnto his wordes: lest ye shulde praysse youre selues, to haue founde out wysdome: because it is God that hath cast him out, & no man. Neuerthelesse, seynge he hath not spoken vnto me, therfore will not I answer him as ye haue done (for they were so abashed, that they coude not make answere, ner speake one worde) but in so moch
as ye wil not speake, stondinge still like dommen & makinge no answer: I haue a good hope for my parte to shappe him an answer & to shewe him my meanynge. For I am full of wordes, & the spere that is within me, copelleth me. Beholde, I am as the new wyne which hath no vente, & bursteth the new vessels in sunder. Therfore wil I speake, that I maye haue vnto: I wil open my lippes, and make answer. I will regarde no maner of personne, no man wil I spare. For yf I wol-de go aboute to please me, I knowe not how soone my maker wolde take me awaye.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

A therfore, heare my wordes (O Job)
& herken vnto all, that I wyll saye: Beholde, I wil open my mouth, & my tonge shal speake out of my charres. My hert shall ordre my wordes a right, & my lippes shal talke of pure wysdome. The spere of God hath made me, & the breth of the Allmightie hath geue me my life. If thou cast, then geue me answer: prepare thy self to stode before me face to face. Beholde, before God am I even as thou, for I am fashioned and made euē of the same mould. Therfore, thou nedeest not be afrayed of me, nether nedest thou to feare, that my auctoute shal be to heuy for the. Now hast thou spoken in my ne eares, & I haue herde y^e voyce of thy wor-des: I am clene without eny sawte, I am innocent, & there is no wickednesse in me. But lo, he hath pyked a quarell agaynst me, & taketh me for his enemy: he hath put my fote in the stocks, & loketh narrowly vnto all my pathes. Beholde, vnto these vnreasonable wordes of thyn wil I make answer.

Shulde God be reprovied of man? Why doest thou then stryue agaynst him, because he geuech the no accomptes of all his doin-ges? For whē God doth once commaunde a thinge, there shulde no man be curious, to search whether it be right. In dreames and visions of the night season (when slombrynge cometh vpo me, that they fall a slepe in their beddes) he rowneth them in the eares, he in-

it is he, which withdraweth man from euell, delynereth him from pryde, kepeth his soule

he chasteneth him with sicknesse, & bringeth him to his bed: he laieth sore punyshment vpo his bones, so that his life maye awaye w^o no bied, & his soule abhorrech to eate eny dayn-tie meate: In so moch, that his body is cle-ne consumed awaye, & his bones appeare no more. His soule draweth on to destruccion, & his life to death. Now yf there be an angel (one amonge a thousande) sent for to speake vnto mā, and to shewe him the right waye:
thē the LORD is mercifull vnto him, & sayeth: He shalbe delynered, yf he fall not dow-ne to destruccion, for I am sufficiently recociled. Than his flesh (which hath bene in misery & trouble) shalbe, as it was in his youth.
For yf he put mitte himself vnto God, he is gracious, & sheweth him his countenaunce ioyfully, & rewardeth man for his rightous-nes. Soch a respecte hath he vnto mē. Therfore let a man confesse, (& saye:) I offended, but he hath chastened & reformed me: I dyd vnrightously, neuerthelesse he hath not recopensed me therafter. Yee he hath delynered my soule from destruccion, & my life, that it seyth y^e light. Lo, thus worketh God all wa-ie with mā, that he kepeth his soule from perishinge, & latteth him enioye the light of y^e lyvinge Marke well (O Job) & heare me: holde the still, untill I haue spoken. But yf thou hast eny thinge to saye, then answer me and speake, for thy answer pleaseth me. If thou hast no thinge, then heare me, and holde thy tonge, so shal I teach the wysdome.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

Like proceeded forth in his communica-cion, & sayde: heare my wordes (O ye wyse men) herken vnto me, ye y^e haue vnder-stondinge. For like as the mouth tasteth the meates, so the eare proueth & discerneth the wordes. As for the iudgment, let vs seke it out amonge o^r selues, yf we maye knowe what is right. And why? Job hath sayde: I am rightious, but God doth me wronge. I must ne-des be a lyar, though my cause be right: & violently am I plagued, where as I made no saw-
te. where is there soch one as Job, yf drinketh vp somefulness like water? which goeth in y^e company of wicked doers, & walketh w^o vngodly mē? For he saith: Though a mā be good, yet is he naught before God. Therfore herke vnto me, ye y^e haue vnderstondinge.

B Farre be it from God, that he shulde medle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Almighty, yf he shulde medle with vnrighteous dealinge: but he rewardeth the workers of man, and causeth every man to fynde accordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God cōdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgment of the Almighty is not vnrighteous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole world? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his spere and breth vnto him? All flesh shal come together vnto nought, & all mē shal turne agayne vnto earth. If thou now haue vnderstōdinge, heare what I saye and herkento the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? If thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euen the same, yf knoweth the rebellious kynge, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye. He hath no respecte vnto the personnes of yf lordly, & regardeth not the rich more thē poore. For they be all the worke of his handes.

C In the twinklinge off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & the tyrauntes rage, then shal they perish, & be taken awaye without handes. And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goinges. There is no darcknes nor thicke shadowe, yf can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mā shalbe suffred to go into iudgment with God.

Many one, yee innumerable both he punyssheth and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. They that were in yf steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mē. Therefore turned they backe traytorously and vnfaithfully fro hē, & wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused yf voyce of the poore to come vnto him, & now he heareth the cōplaynte of soch as are in necessity. If he deliuer & graunte pardō, who will iudge or condemne? But yf he hyde awaye his countenance, who wil turne it aboute agayne, whether it be to the people or to eny man? For the wickednesse & synne of yf people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer thē. For so moch then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. If I haue gone amysse, enforme me: yf I haue done wronge, I wil leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answer? Art thou afrayed of eny thinge, seyngethou beganest first to speake, & not I? For els the men of vnderstōdinge & wisdomethat haue herd me, might saye: What cāst thou speake? As for Job he hath nether spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O sacher, let Job be well tryed, because he he hath turned himself to yf wicked: yee aboute his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs, in yf he stryuethe agaynst God with his wordes.

The XXXV Chapter.

Liu spake morouer, and sayde: Thinkest thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, thē I yf am a synner? Therefore will I geue answer vnto the & thy frendes: loke vnto the heauen, & beholde it: cōsidre yf cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. If thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? If thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? If thou be righteous, what geuest thou him? Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of soch an vngodly personne as thou, & of yf some of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greates crie & cōplaynte made by thē that are oppressed with violence, yee everyman complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrauntes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? & yf shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night: Which geneth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the beastes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heaue. If eny soch complayne, no mā geueth answer, and yf because of the wickednesse off proude tyrauntes. But yf a man call vpon God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Almighty accepte his crie? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thyself before him, and put thy trust in him: Then vscthe he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curious and depe inquisitiones. Therefore hath Job opened his mouth but in vayne, & folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Liu proceeded forth in his talkinge, & sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto yf yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, & no lye: and the knowlege wherewithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God easteth not awaye yf mightie, for he himself is mightie in power and wisdom.

As for the vngodly, he preserveth the not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes away from the righteous he setteth vp Kynges in their Trone, and confirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt ther in. But yf they belayed in prison and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes and dedes and the synnes wherw^t they have used cruell violence.

He with punysheinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. If they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, and their yeares in pleasure and ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the strearde, and perish or euer they be awarre. As for such as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypocrytes, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his prisoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe w^t y^e condemned. The poore delyuereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth such as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the bottomlesse pytte that is beneth: and yf thou wilt holde the quyet, he shal fyll thy table with plenteousnesse.

Neverthelesse, thou hast condemned the iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen such a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffre. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with crueltye, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the and all such mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But beware that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hyther to thou hast chosen more then neednesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye powe: Where is there such a gyde and lawe geuer as he? Who wil reprove him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

O confidre how greates and excellent his workes be, whom all men loane and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre off. Beholde, so greates is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to y^e experieñce of his yeares. He turneth y^e water to smal droppes, he dryueth his cloudes together for to rayne, so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can spiede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpo them, and to coner the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth the abundaunce of meate. In y^e turnyng of a hande he hydereth the light, and at his commaundement it cometh agayne. The rysinge vponther of sheweth he to his frendes and to the catell.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

If this my hert is astonnied, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse y^e goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth such a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceane it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sorowde, when God sendeth out his voyce: great thinges both he, which we can not comprehend. When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediately the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon every man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The beestes crepe in to their dennes, and take their rest. Out of the south cometh the tempest, and colde out of the north.

Psal. 148. b

At the bierth of God, the frost cometh, and the waters are shed abroad. The cloudes do their laboure in geuynge moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, accordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth the thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o Job) stonde still, and confidre the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of couñcel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his couñcell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whē the lōde is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to lōke vpo, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hi, for we are vnniete because of dardnes. Shal it be tolde him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? Seinge then that every body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stode in feare of hi? Chap. XXXVIII.

21 Jhen spake the LORDE vnto Job out of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeh his mynde with foolyshe wordes? Wyde vpthy loynes like a mā, for I will question the, se thou geue me a dyrecte answer. Where wast thou, when I layed y' foundations of the earth? Tell planely yff thou hast vnderstandinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spied y' lyne vpon it? Where vpon stode the pilers of it? Or, who layed y' corner stone? where wast thou when the momynge starres gaue me prayse, and when all the angels of God reioysed? Who shutt the see with doores, when it brake forth as a childe out off his mothers wombe? When I made the cloudes to be a coueringe for it, and swedled it with y' darcke: when I gaue it my commaundement, makinge doores & barres for it, sayenge: thither shalt thou come, but no further, and here shalt thou laye downe thy proude and hye warres. Hast thou geue the momynge his charge (as soone as thou wast borne) and shewd the dayesprynge his place, y' it might take holde of the corners of the earth, & y' the vngodly might be shakē out? Their cokles & weapēs hast thou turned like claye, & set the vp agayne as the chaunginge of a garment. Reue thou hast spoyled the vngodly off their light, & broke the arme of the proude. Camest thou euer into the groude of the see, Or, hast thou walked in y' lowe corners of y' depe? haue the gates of deatch bene opened vnto the, or hast thou sene the dore of euerlastige treasure? Hast thou also perceaued, how brode y' earth is? Now yf thou hast knowlege of all, chē shewe me where light dwelleth, and where darcknes is: y' thou mayest bringe vs vnto their quarters, yf thou cast tell the waye to their houses. Knowest thou (when thou wast borne) how olde thou shuldest be?

22 Wentest thou euer in to the treasures off the snowe, or hast thou sene y' secrete places of the halc: which I haue prepared agaynst the tyme of trouble, agaynst the tyme of battell & warre? By what waye is the light parted, & the heate dealt out vpon earth? Who deuyled the abundaunce of waters in to ryuers, or who maketh a waye for the stormy wyether, y' it watereth & moystureth y' drye & baren ground: to make the grasse growe in places where no body dwelleth, & in the wil-

Out of whose wombe came the yse? who hath gendred the celdnes of y' ayre? y' the waters are as harde as stones, & lye congeeled aboue the depe. Hast thou brought y' vñ. starres together? Or, art thou able to breake the Circle of heauē? Cast thou bunge forth the momynge starre or the euenynge starre at cōuenient tyme, & cōueyeth home agayne? Knowest thou the course off heauē, y' thou mayest set vp the ordinaunce therof vpo earth? Moreover, cast thou lift vpthy voyce to y' cloudes, y' they maye poure downe a greate rayne vpo the? Canst thou chōdie also y' they maye go their waye, & be obedient vnto the, sayēge: lo, here are we? Who geueth sure wisdome, or stedfast vnderstandinge? who nombrech the cloudes in wisdome? who stilleth y' vehement waters of the heauē? who turneth the clottes to dust, & chē to be clottes agayne? Huntst thou the praye fro the Lyon, or sedest thou his whelpes lyē gein their dēnes & lurkinge in their couches? who prouydeth meate for the rauen, whē his yonge ones crie vnto God, and fle aboute for want of meate? Kest thou the monethes after they ingendie, y' thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast their yonge ones, & when they are deliuered off their trauaile & payne? How their yōge ones growe vp & ware greete thorow good feedinge: who letteth the wilde asse go fre, or who loseth the bōdes of the Meele? Vnto whō I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, & the vntilled londe to be their dwellinge place. That they maye geue no force for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryuer: but to see their pasture aboute the mountaynes, & to folowe vpon the grene grasse. Wyll the vnicorne be so tame as to do y' seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribbe? Cast thou bynde y' yock aboute him in thy forowes, to make him plowe after the in y' vallis? Mayest thou trust hi (because he is stronge) or cōmitte thy labo^r vnto hi? Mayest thou beleue hi, y' he wil bringe home y' come, or to cary eny thinge vnto y' barne? The Estrich (whose fethers are sayter thē y' wynges of the sparrow hawke) whē he hath layed his egges vpon the greunde, he brydeth them in the dust, and forgetteth them: so that they might be troden with fete, or broken with fennie wilde beaste.

The boke of Job.

So harde is he vnto his yong ones, as though they were not his, and laboureth in wayne without eny feare. And that because God hath taken wisdom from him, & hath not geuen him vnderstandinge. When his tyme is, he flyeth vp an hie, and caretch neither for horse ner man.

C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or larned him to bowe downe his neck with feare: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a gresshopper, where as the stoute neyenge that he maketh, is fearfull: he breaketh yf grounde with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to meete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny siverde. Though the quyuers rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilbe glistre: yet ruff heth he in fearfully, and beatech vpon the grounde. He fearth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, rash (sayeth he) for he smelleth the bacell as farre of, yf noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

D Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshaute flyeth comarde the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hie at thy commaundement? He abyderth in the stony rockes, & vpon the hie toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. His yong ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deede body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Mat. 24. 6

Morouer, God spake vnto Job and sayde: Can he that stryuet with the Allmightie, be arrest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? ne into the myze, and coner their faces with darcknesse: Then will I confesse also, that thyne owne right honde hath saued the.

B Beholde, the cruell beast (whom I made wth the) which eateth haye as an oxe: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the navell of his body. He spredeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his waynes are stiff. His shynnes are like pipes off brasse, his rygge bones are like stauces of yro. First when God made him, he ordened the wyldernes for him, yf the mountaynes shulde geue him grasse, where all the beastes of the filde take their pastyme. He lyeth amonge the reedes in the Mosses, the fennes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wylowes of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Jordane without eny tranayle. Who darre laye hande vpon him openly, and vndertake to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, & laye a snare for him?

C Darrest thou drawe out Leviathan with an angle, or bynde his tenge with a snare? Canst thou put a ryge in the nose of him, or bore his chafres there wth a naule? Wyl he make many fayre wordes with the (thynekest thou) or flatter the? Wyl he make a couenaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to cempell him to do the continual seruyce? Wilt thou take thy passyme wth him as with a byrde, or geue him wth thy maydens, that thy cempanyens maye herow him in pceis, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? Canst thou fylle the nett wth his slayne, or yf fysh panyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to conside what harme might happethe there thorow and not to touch him. For when thou thynkest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle the: Every man also that seyth him, shall go backe. And why: there darre none be so bolde, as to rayse him vp.

is so ioyned to another, that no ayre can come in: See one hangerth so vpon another, and sticketh so together, that they can not be sundered. His neyng is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mornynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out of his nostrils there goeth a smoke, like as out of an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remayneth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioyned so straitly one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, and as fast as the stythye that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the waxes heuy. If he drawe out the swearde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yron, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not awaye for him that bendeth the bowe, nor as for slyng stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like yf sharpe potsheredes. He maketh the depe to seth and bey like a pott, and sterceth the see together like an oynment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. If a man will confide all hys chinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

The XLII. Chapter.

1. Re. 16. b

The Job answered the LORDE, and sayde: I knowe that thou hast power of all chinges, and that there is no thought hyd vnto the. For who can kepe his owne counsell so secrete, but it shall be knowne? Therfore haue I spoken truthfully, seynge these chinges are so hye, and passe myne vnderstandinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answer me vnto the thinge that I will aske the. I haue geuen diligent eare vnto the, and now I see yf with myne eyes. Wherfore I geue myne owne self y blame, and take repentance in the dust and ashes.

Now when the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Job, he sayde vnto Eliphaz yf Themanite: I am displeased with the & thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thin ge yf is right before me, like as my seruant Job hath done. Therfore take viij. open and seuen rammes, and go to my seruant Job, offre vp also for youre selues a brennt offerynge, and let my seruant Job praye for you. Him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spokē yf thinge which is right, like as my seruant Job hath done.

So Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad yf Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite wente their waye, and did accordynge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the personne off Job, and the LORDE turned him vnto Job, when he prayed for his frendes: See the LORDE gaue Job twyse as moch as he had afore.

And then came there vnto him all his brethren, all his sisters with all them that had bene off his acquaintance afore, and ate bread with him in his house, wondring at him, and comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought vpon him. Every man gaue him a shepe and a Jewell of golde.

And the LORDE made Job richer then he was before: for he had xliij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock of oxen, and a M. asses. He had children also: viij. sonnes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, pouerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In all the lande were none founde so fayre, as the daughters of Job, & their father gaue them eueritaunce amonge their brethren.

After this lynced Job xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, & his childers children vnto the fourth generation. And

For the LORDE aloweth yf waye of the righteous, but the waye of the vngodly shal perishe.

The II. A psalme of David.

A Why do the heithen grudge? why do the people ymagyn vayne thinges? The kynges of the earth stode vp, and the rulers are come together, agaynst the LORDE ad agaynst his anoynted. Let vs breake their bondes a sunder, and cast awaye their yocke from vs. Neuerthelesse, he that dwelleth in heauen, shal laugh the to scorne: yee euen the LORDE himself shal haue them in derision. Then shal he speake vnto them in his wrath, and vexe them in his sore displeasure. Yet haue I set my kynge vpon my holy hill of Sion. As for me I will preache the lawe, whereof the LORDE hath sayde vnto me: Thou art my sonne, this daye haue I begotten the. Desyre off me, and I shall geue the the heithen for thine inheritaunce, And the vtremost partes of the worlde for thy possession. Thou shalt rule them with a rodde of yron, and breake the in pece: like an earthen vessell. Be wyse now therefore (o ye kynges) be warned, ye that are iudges of the earth. Serue the LORDE with feare, and reioyse before him with reuerence. Kysse the sonne, lest the LORDE be angrye, and so ye perish from the right waye. For his wrath shal be kindled shortly: blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

The III. A psalme of David.

A Why are they so many (o LORDE) yf trouble me: a greate multitude are they, that rise agaynst me. I see many one there be that saye off my scule: there is no helpe for him in God. Sela But thou (o LORDE) art my defender, my worshippe, ad the lifter vp of my heade. I call vpon the LORDE with my voyce, and he heareth me out of his holy hill. Sela I layed me downe and slepte, but I rose vp agayne, for the LORDE susteyned me. I am not a frayd for thousandes of the people, that compass me rounde aboute. Up LORDE, and helpe me, o my God: for thou smytest all myne enemies vpon the chete bones, and breakest the eeth of the vngodly. Helpe belongeth vnto the LORDE, therefore let thy blessinge

The IIII. A psalme of David.

Hear me when I call, o God of my righteousness, thou that comfortest me in my trouble: haue mercy vpon me, and hearken vnto my prayer. O ye sonnes off men: how longe will ye blaspheme myne honoure? why haue ye soch pleasure in vanyte, z seke after lyes? Sela Knowe this, that the LORDE dealeth maruelously with his saynte: and when I call vpon the LORDE, he heareth me. Be angrye, but synne not: come wth youre owne hertes vpo^r yo^r beddes, z remembre yo^r selues. Sela. Offre yf sacrifice of righteousness, z put yo^r trust in yf LORDE. There be many yf saye: who wil do vs eny good? whereas thou (o LORDE) hast she wed vs the light of yf countenaunce. Thou reioyshest myne herce, though their encrease be greate both in come z wyne. Therefore wil I laye me downe in peace, z take my rest: for thou LORDE only setteest me in a sure dwellinge. The V. A psalme of David.

Hear my wordes (o LORDE) confidre in my callinge. O marke the voyce of my petition, my kynge z my God: for vnto the wil I make my prayer. Hear my voyce by tymes (o LORDE) for early in the morninge wil I gett me vnto the, yee z yf wth diligence. For thou art not the God yf hath pleasure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwell with the. Soch as be cruell maye not stonde in thy sight, thou art an enemye vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE abhorreth the blende thurstie and disceatfull. But as for me, I wil come in to thy house, euen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: ad in thy feare wyll I worshippe toward the thy holy temple. Leade me (o LORDE) in thy righteousness, because of myne enemies, ad make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faithfulness in their mouthes: they dyssemble in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceau. Punyshe them (o God) that they maye perish in their owne ymaginations: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodlinesse, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse: yee let them ever be geuyng of thanks, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioyfull in the. O LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: Oh chasten me not in thy heavy displeasure. Haue mercy vpon me (O LORDE) for I am weake: O LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe? Turne the (O LORDE) & deliuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remembreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanks in the hell? I am weery of groyninge: Every night was she I my bedde, & water my couche with my teares. My countenance is chaunged for very inward greife, I consume awaye, I haue so many enemies. Awaye frome all ye wicked doers, for the LORDE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge. The LORDE hath herde myne humble petition, the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemies shalbe confounded & sore vexed: yee they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

Out of the mouth of the very babes & sucklings thou hast ordered prayse, because of thine enemies, y^e thou mightest destroye the enemy and the auenger. For I confide thy heauens, even the worke off thy syngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. Oh what is man, y^e thou art so myndfull of him: ether the sonne of man that thou visitest him? After thou haddest for a season made him lower the angels, thou crownedest him with hono^r & glory. Thou hast set him above the workes off thy bondes: thou hast put all thinges in subiection vnder his fete. All shepe and oxen, yee and the bestes of the felde. Here the hebrues begynne the x. psalme.

D Why art thou gone so farre of, o LOR-DE: wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Whyle y vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginacions which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desy-re, the curvons blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so priede and full of indignaciō, that he careth not:
whether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he desyeth all his ennues.
For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, frau-de and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauayle & sorow. He sytteth lurking in the gardens, that he maye pryuely murther the innocent,
his eyes are set vpon the poore. He lyeth way-tinge secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne.
He lurketh that he maye ranysh the poore, yee to ranysh the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyteth he, then oppresseth he & casteth downe the poore with his auctourie. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so y he will neuer see it. Arise o LORDE God, lift vp thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherfore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush,
he careth not for it? This thou seist, for thou considrest the mysery and sorowe: The

poore geueth himself ouer in to thy hande,
and comitteth him vnto the, for thou art
the helper of the frendlesse. Breakethou y arme off the vngodly and malycious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for e-uer, ye heithen shal perish out off his londe.
LORDE, thou hearest the desyious longinge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine ea-re herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their righte, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The X. A psalme of David.

Will the LORDE put I my trust: how will yethen saye to my soule: that she shulde fle as a byde vpon youre hill?
For lo, the vngodly haue bet their bowe, and made redy their arrowes in the quyer: that they maye prauely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundacion haue they cast downe, what cā the righteous the do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: He cōsidereth it with his eyes, his eye lyddes beholdeth the childien of men. The LORDE seith both the righteous and vngodly, but who so deliterh in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempest: this rewarde shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is righteous, ad he loueth righteousnes, his countenaunce beholdeth the thinge y is iust.

The XI. A psalme of David.

Help LORDE, for there is not one saynte more: very fewe faithfull are there amonge the childien off men. Ency man telleth lyes to his neghbo, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rete out all disceatfull lippes, ad the tonge that speaketh proude thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde prouayle: we are they that oughe to speake, who is lord ouer vs? Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, & because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp (sayeth the LORDE) I wil helpe the, and set the
at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: euē as y syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. Re-pe the therfore (o LORDE) and preserue vs fro this generacion for euer. And why? when vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the childien of men, all are full of y vngodly.

How longe wilt thou forget me, o LORD: for ever: how longe wilt thou hyde thy face from me? Oh how longe shall I seeke counsell in my soule: how longe shall I be so vexed in my herte: how longe shall my ne enemy triumphe ouer me? Considre, ad heare me, o LORD my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest my ne enemy saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hi for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my hert is ioysfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORD, that dealeth so longyngly with me. (See I wil prayse the name of the LORD the most hyest)

The XIII. A psalme of David.

The foolish bodyes saye in their herces: Tush, there is no God. They are corrupte, ad become abhominable in their doynges, there is not one y doth good. The LORD looked downe fro heauē vpo the children of men, to se yf there were any, that wolde vnderstonde & seeke after God. But they are all gone out of the waye, they are altogether become vnprofitable: there is none that doth good, no not one. * Their throte is an open sepulchre, with their tonges they haue disceaued, the poyson of Aspes is vnder their lippes. * Their mouth is full of cursinge and bytternes, their fete are swift to shed bloude. * Destruction & wretchednes are in their wayes, ad the waye of peace haue they not knowne: there is no feare off God before their eyes. How can they haue vnderstandinge, y worke myschese, eatinge vp my people, as it were bred, & call not vpo y LORD?

Therefore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondesth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the counsell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORD. Oh y the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORD wolde deliuer his people out of captiuyte. Thā shulde Jacob reioyse, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The XIII. A psalme of David.

LORDE, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle: who shal rest vpo y holy hill? Euen he y ledeth an vncorrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ad that speaketh the treuth from his herte. He y vseth no disceat in his tonge: he that doth no euell to his neighbour, & flaundreth not his neighbours. He y setteth not by the vngodly but maketh moch of the that feare the LORD: he y sweareth vnto his neighbour & dispoyncteth him not. He that geueth not his money vpon vsury, and taketh no rewarde agaynst the innocēt. Whoso doth these thinges, shal neuer be removed.

The XV. A psalme of David.

Reserue me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y LORD: thou art my God, my goodes are no thinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earch, and vpon sods like. But they y runne after another, shall haue greate trouble. Their drynt offerynge of bloude wil not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my mouth. The LORD himself is my good and my porcion, thou manteynest my inheritaunce. The lotte is fallen vnto me in a fayre grounde, yee I haue a goodly heretage. I wil thanke the LORD for geuyngeme warnynge: my reynes also haue chastened me in the night season. Afore honde sawe I God allwayes before me, for he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be moued.

Therefore dyd my hert reioyce, & my tunge was glad, my flesh also shal rest in hope. For why? thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, nether shalt thou suffre thy saynte to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye w thy countenaunce. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for evermore.

The XVI. A psalme of David.

Here y right (o LORD) considre my cōplaynte: herken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayed mouth. Let my sentence come forth fro thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equall. Thou hast proued & visited myne herte in the night season: thou hast tried me in the fyre, & hast founde no wickednes in me: for I vtterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me fro the workes of men, in y waye off the murtherer. Oh ordre thou my goynge in thy pathes, that my fete steppes slippe not. For vnto the I crie, heare me o God: encline thine eares to me, and herke vnto my wordes. Shewe y marvelous lonyng kindness, thou that sauest them which put their trust in the, from sods as resist thy right honde. Repe me as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges. From the vngodly that trouble me, from myne enemies which compasse my soule rounde aboute.

Which manteyne their owne welchynesse with oppression, z their mouth speaketh proude thinges. They lye waytinge in o' waye on enery syde, turnynge their eyes downe to the grounde. Like as a lyon that is greedy of his pray, z as it were a Lyons whelpc lurking in his denne. Up LORDE, dispoynce him z cast him downe: delyuer my soule with thy swerde from the vngodly. Fro the men of thy honde (o LORDE) from the men of the worlde, which haue their porcion in this life: whose belies thou fyllest with thy treasure.

They haue children at their desyre, and leane the reste of their substance for their babes.

But as for me, I will beholde thy presence in righteousness: and when thy glory appeareth, I shall be satisfied.

The XVII. psalme of David when he was delyuered from the honde off Saul.

21 Will loue the (o LORDE) my strength. The LORDE is my succor, my refuge, my Sauior: my god, my helper: in whom I trust: my buckler, y' home of my health, z my protection. I will prayse y' LORDE z call vpon him, so shall I be safe from myne enemies.

2 The sorowes of death compassed me, z the blowes of vngodlynes made me a frayd. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpon me. Yet in my trouble I cal'd vpon the LORDE, z complayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy temple, z my complaynte came before hi, yee eue into his eares. The earth trembled z quaked, the very foundations of the hilles shoke z were remoued, because he was wiethe.

There went a smoke out of his nostrils, ad a consuming fyre out of his mouth, so y' coales were kindled at it. He bowed the heauens z came downe, z it was darcke vnder his feet.

3 He rode vpon the Cherubims z dyd flye: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darcknesse his paulyon rounde aboute hi, with darcke water z thicke cloudes to couer him. At the bughenes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones z coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out of y' heauē, z the heyth gaue his thondrie w' hale stones z coales of fyre. He sent out his arrowes z scatred the, he cast sore lightnings, z destroyed the. The panges of water were sene, z the foundations of the rounde worlde were discovered at y' chiding (o LORDE) at the blasting z breeth of thy displeasure. He sent downe fro the heyth to fetch me, z toke me out of greete waters. He delyuered me from my stronge enemies, and from my foes which were to mightie for me. They priuened me in the tyme of my trouble, but y' LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also into lyberte: z delyuered me, because he had a fauor vnto me. The LORDE shall rewarde me after my righteous dealinge, z accordinge to the cleanness of my hōdes shall he recompense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, z haue not behaved myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, z cast not out his commaundementes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hi, z wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therefore shall y' LORDE rewarde me after my righteous dealinge, z accordinge vnto y' cleanness of my hōdes in his eye sight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, z w' y' innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the cleane thou shalt be cleane z with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, z bringe downe the hye lokes of the proude. Thou lightest my candle, o LORDE my God: thou makest my darcknesse to be light. For in the I can discerne an host of me: yee in my God I can leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the fyre: he is a styllte of defence, for all them that trust in him. For who is God, but the LORDE? Or, who hath any strength, but our God? It is God that hath gyided me with strength and made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my feete like hartes feete, and set me vpon an hye. He teacheth myne handes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a booke off scile. Thou hast geue me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correccion maketh me greate. Thou hast made rowme ynough vnder me for to go, that my foete steppes shulde not slyde. I will folowe open myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stonde, but fall vnder my feete. Thou hast gyided me with strength vnto y' battell, thou hast throwe them all downe vnder me, that rose vp agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backs vpon me, thou hast destroyed the y' hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe the: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde the not. I will beate them as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as y' claye in the stretes. Thou shalt delyuer me from the strynges of the people, thou shalt make me the heade of the heith. A people whom I haue not knowne, shall serue me.

All they y^e se me, laugh me to scorn: they shute out their lippes, and shake their heades. He trusted in God, let him deliuer him: let him helpe hi, yf he wil haue him. But thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wombe: thou wast my hope, when I hanged yet vpon my mothers brestes. I haue bene left vnto the euersence I was borne, thou art my God, cūe fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me the, for trouble is harde at hande, and here is none to helpe me. Greate uiles are come aboute me, fast oxen close me in on euery syde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaringe lyon.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my herte in the myddest of my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My strength is dried vp like a potsherde, my tounge cleueth to my goomes, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the coucell of y^e wileked hath layed sege agaynst me. They feared my hondes and my fete, I might haue tolde all my bones: as for them, they stode staring and lookinge vpon me. They haue parted my garmentes amonge them, and cast lottes vpon my vesture.

But benot thou farre fro me, O LORDE: thou art my succoure, haist thou to helpe me. Deliuer my soule from the swearde, my darlinge from the power of the dogge. Save me from the lyons mouth, and heare me fro amonge the hornes off the vnicornes. So will I declare thy name vnto my brethien, in the myddest off the congregacion will I prayse the. O prayse the LORDE yet that feare him: Magnific him, al ye sede of Jacob, and let all y^e sede of Israel feare hi. For he hath not despysed ner abhorred the miserable estate of the poore: he hath not hyd his face from me, but whē I called vnto him, he herde me. I wil prayse the in the greate congregacion, and performe my vowes in the sight off all the that feare the. The poore shal eat and be satisfied: they y^e seke after y^e LORDE shal prayse him: youre herte shal lyue for euer.

All the endes of the worlde shal remembre thy miseries, and be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generacions of the heithen shal worshipe before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he shal be the gouernoure of y^e earth. All such as ke fast vpon earth, shal see also and worshipe: All they that lye in the dust, and lyue so hardly, shall fall downe before him. The sede shall serue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They shal come, and declare his righteuesnes: vnto a people that shal be borne, whō the LORDE hath made.

The XXII. A psalme of David.

The LORDE is my shepherde, I can wante nethinge. He feedeth me in a grene pasture, and ledeth me to a fressher water. He quickeneth my soule, and bringeth me forth in the waye of righteuousnes for his names sake. Though I shulde walke now in the valley of the shadowe of death, yet I feare no euell, for thou art with me: thy staffe and thy shepchoke comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me agaynst mine enemies: thou annoyntest my heade with oyle, and fyllest my cuppe full. Oh let thy louynge kyndnes and mercy folowe me all the dayes off my life, that I maye dwell in the house off the LORDE for euer.

The XXIII. A psalme of David.

The earth is the LORDES, and all that therein is: the copase of the worlde, and all y^e dwell therein. For he hath founded it vpon the sees, and buylded it vpon the fiondes. Who shal go vp in to the hill off the LORDE? Or, who shal remayne in his holy place? Euen he y^e hath innocēt hōdes and a cleue herte: which listeth not vpon his mynde vnto vanite, and sweareth not to disceane. He shal receaue the blessinge fro the LORDE, and mercy fro God his saviour. This is y^e generacio of the y^e seke him, of the y^e seke y^e face, O Jacob. Sela. Open y^e gates (O ye princes) let the euerlastinge doores be opened, y^e kyng of glory maye come in. Who is this kyng of glory? It is the LORDE stronge and mighty, euen the LORDE mightie in battell.

Open youre gates (O ye princes) let the euerlastinge doores be opened, y^e the kyng off glory maye come in. Who is this kyng off glory? It is the LORDE of hostes, he is the kyng of glory. Sela.

The XXIII. A psalme of David.

Unto the (O LORDE) I lift vp my soule. My God, I trust in y^e: Oh let me not be confounded, lest myne enemies triumphe ouer me. For all they y^e hope in y^e shal not be ashamed: but such as be shamefull despyse w^out a cause. they shall be put to confusio. Shewe me thy wayes (O LORDE) and teach me thy pathes. Led me in y^e trueth and lerne me, for thou art the God off my health, and in the is my hope all the daye longe.

The psalter

Call to remembrance, O LORD, thy tender mercies & thy lowly kindnesses, which haue bene euer of olde. Oh remembre not y synnes & offences of my youth, but according vnto thy mercy thynke vpon me (O LORD) for thy goodnesse. O how freely & righteuous is the LORD, therefore wil he teach synners in the waye. He ledeth the simple a right, and soch as be meke the lerneth he his wayes. All the wayes of the LORD are very mercy & faithfulness, vnto soch as kepe his testament and couenaunt. For thy names sake, O LORD, be mercifull vnto my synne, for it is greate. What so euer he be that feareth the LORD, he shal shewe him the waye that he hath chosen.

His soule shall dwell at ease, and his sede shall possesse the londe. The secretes of the LORD are amongest them that feare him, and he sheweth them his couenaunt. Myne eyes are euer lookinge vnto the LORD, for he shal plucke my feet out of y nett. Turne the vnto me and haue mercy vpon me, for I am desolate and in misery. The sorowes of my herte are greate, O brynge me out of my troubles.

Loke vpon my aduersite and misery, and forgeue me all my synnes. Considre how myne enemies are many, and beare a malicious hate agaynst me. O kepe my soule, and deliuer me: let me not be confounded, for I haue put my trust in the. Let innocency and righteuous dealinge wayte vpon me, for my hope is in the. Deliuer Israel (O God) out of all his trouble.

The XXV. A psalme of David.

BE thou my iudge (O LORD) for I walke innocently: my trust is in the LORD, therefore shall I not fall.

Examine me O LORD, and proue me: trie out my reynes and my hert. For thy lowly kindness is before myne eyes, and I walke in thy trueth. I syt not amonge wayne personnes, and haue no fellowship with the disceatfull. I hate the congregacion of the wicked, and I will not syt amonge the vngodly.

I washe my hondes with innocency O LORD, and so go I to thine altier. That I maye shewe the voyce of thy prayse, and tell of all thy wonderous workes. LORD, I loue the habitation of thy house, and y place wher thy honoure dwelleth. O dest: oye not my soule with the synners, ner my life with the bloudthirstie. In whose hondes is wickednesse, and their right hond is full of giftes. But as for me I will walke innocently: O deliuer me, and be mercifull vnto me. My force stenderh right: I wil prayse the (O LORD) in the congregacions.

The XXVI. A psalme of David.

THE LORD is my light and my health: whom then shulde I feare? the LORD is the strength of my life, for whom the shulde I be afrayed? Therefore when the wicked (euen myne enemies & my foes) came vpon me, to eat vpon my flesh, they stombled and fell. Though an hooste of men were layed agaynst me, yet shal not my hert be afrayed: and though there rose vp warre against me, yet wil I put my trust in him. One thinge haue I desired of the LORD, which I wil requyre: namely, that I maye dwell in the house of the LORD all the dayes of my life, to beholde the sayre beauty of the LORD, and to vyset his temple.

For in the tyme of trouble he hath hyd me in his tabernacle, yee in the secrete place of his dwellinge hath he kepte and set me vpon a rocke of stone. And now hath he lift vpon my heade aboue myne enemies, that compassed me rounde aboute. Therefore wil I confesse in his dwellinge, the oblation of thankes geuynge: I wil both synge & speake prayses vnto the LORD. Herte vnto my voyce (O LORD) when I crie vnto the: haue mercy vpon me & heare me. My hert speaketh vnto the, my face seeketh the, yee LORD, thy face wil I see. O hyde not thou thy face frome, cast not thy seruante of in displeasure. Thou art my succoure, leane me not, nether forsake me, O God my Saviour. For my father and my mother haue forsaken me, but the LORD hath taken me vpon. Shewe me thy waye O LORD, and lede me in the right path, because of myne enemies. Deliuer me not in to the wylles of myne aduersaries, for there are false wytnesses risen vp agaynst me, and they ymagyn myschefe. Nevertheless, I beleue rely to seth the goodnesse of the LORD in the londe of the lyuynge. O tary thou y LORD, O sleysure, be stronge, let thine hert be of good comforte, and wayte thou still for the LORD.

The XXVII. A psalme of David.

Unto the wil I crie, o my stronge defence: thinke no scome of me, lest yf thou make the as though thou herdest not, I become like them, that go bewne into y pytte. Heare the voyce of my humble petition, when I crie vnto the, and holde vpon my hondes towards thy holy temple.

O plucke me not away amonge the vngodly and wicked doers, which speake frendly to their neghbores, but ymagin myschefe in their hertes. Rewardethem accordinge to their dedes and wickednesse of their owne inuencions. Recompense them after y^e woorkes of their hōdes, paye them that they haue deserued. For they regarde not the woorkes of the LORDE, ner the operacion of his hādes: therfore shal he breake them downe, and not buyldethem vp. Praised be y^e LORDE, for he hath herde the voyce of my humble peticiō. The LORDE is my strēgth and my shyld: my herte hoped in him, & I am helped: therfore my hert daūseth for ioye, and I will synge prayses vnto him. The LORDE is the strength of his people, he is the defender and Sauoure of his annoynded.

O helpe thy people, geue thy blessinge vnto thy enheritaunce: fede them, and set them vp for ever.

The XXVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Write vnto the LORDE (o ye mightie) ascribe vnto the LORDE worshippe and strength. Geue the LORDE the honoure of his name, bowe youre selues to the holy magesty of the LORDE. It is the LORDE that commaundeth the waters: It is the glorious God that maketh y^e thonder: it is the LORDE y^e ruleth the see. The voyce of the LORDE is mightie in operacion, the voyce of the LORDE is a glorious voyce. The voyce of the LORDE breaketh the Cedre trees: yee the LORDE breaketh the Ceders of Libanus. He maketh them to slippe like a calfe: Libanus and Sirion like a yonge vnycome. The voyce of the LORDE deuiderh the flames of fyre: the voyce of the LORDE shaketh the wilderness, yee the LORDE shaketh the wilderness of Cades.

The voyce of the LORDE moueth y^e hyndes & discovereth the thicke busshes: in his temple shal everyman speake of his honoure. The LORDE stilleth the water floude, & y^e LORDE remayneth a kynge for ever. The LORDE shall geue power vnto his people, the LORDE shal geue his people the blessinge of peace.

The XXIX. A psalme of Dauid.

Will magnifie y^e (LORDE) for thou hast set me vp, & not suffred my foes to triūphe over me. LORDE my God, I cried vnto the, and thou hast healed me. Thou LORDE hast brought my soule out of hell: thou hast kepte my life, where as they go downe to the pytte. Synge prayses vnto the LORDE (o ye sayntes of his) ge-ue thankes vnto him for a remembraunce of his holynesse. For his wiatchendureth but the twinklinge of an eye, and his pleasure is in life: heynesse maye well endure for a night, but ioye commeth in the mornynge.

As forme, whē I was in prosperite, I sayde: Tush, I shal neuer fall more. (And why? thou LORDE of thy goodnesse haddest made my hill so stronge.) But as soone as thou turnedest thy face frome, I was brought in feare. The cried I vnto y^e (LORDE) yee vnto y^e LORDE made I my prayer. What profit is there in my bloude, yf I go downe to corrupcion? Maye the dust geue thankes vnto ye? O shal it declare thy faithfulness? Heare (LORDE) and haue mercy vpon me: LORDE be thou my helper. And so thou hast turned my heynesse into ioye: thou hast put of my sack cloth, & gyrded me wth gladnesse. That my hono^r might synge prayses vnto the wth out ceassynge: LORDE my God, I wil geue thankes vnto the for ever.

The XXX. A psalme of Dauid.

When the, LORDE, is my trust: let me neuer be put to cōfucion, but deliuer me in thy rightuousnesse. Bowe downe thine eare to me, make haist to deliuer me: be thou my stronge rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde & my castell: O be thou my gyde, & lede me for thy names sake. Drawe me out of the nett y^e they haue layed pūely for me, for thou art my strēgth.

Into thy hondes I commende my spire: thou hast deliuered me LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast consided my trouble, thou hast knowen my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not deliuered me ouer in to the hōdes of the enemye, but hast set my fete in a large rowme. Haue mercy vpon me, LORDE, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heynesse, yee my soule and my body. My life is wahren olde with heynesse, and my yeares wth mornynge. My strēgth fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprove amonge all myne enemyes, my neghbores & they of myne owne aquauntaunce are a frayd of me: they y^e se me in the strete, cōveye them selues frome. I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.

For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: every man abhorreth me; they ha-

we gathered a council together agaynst me, and are purposed to take awaye my life.

But my hope is in y^e LORDE, & I saye: thou art my God. My tyme is in thy honde: delyuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them y^e persecute me. Shewe thy seruaunt the light of thy countenance, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (o LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confusion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyenge lippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdainedly & despitefully speake agaynst the righteous. O how greate and manifolde is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare y^e? O what thinges bringest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

D Thou hyddest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou keptest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tonges. Thankes be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greates kyndnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodane feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheles, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORDE (all ye his sayntes) for the LORDE preserveth the faithfull, and plenteously rewardeth he the proude doer. Be stronge therfore & take a good herte vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORDE.

The XXXL A psalme of David.

A Rom. 4.2 Blessed are they, whose vnrighteousnesse is forgiven, and whose synnes are covered. Blessed is the man, vnto whom the LORDE imputeth no synne, in whose spere there is no gyle. For whyle I helde my tonge, my bones consumed awaye thowrow my daylie complaynynges. And because thy hande was so heavy vpon me both daye and night, my moysture was like the drouth in Sommer. Sela.

Tob 13. b Luce 13. c Therfore I confessed my synne vnto the, and hyd not myne vnrighteousnesse. I sayde: I will knowlege myne offence, and accuse my self vnto the LORDE, and so thou forgavest me the wickednesse of my synne.

Pro 18. b Sela. For this shal every saynte make his prayer vnto the in due season, therfore shall not the greate water floudes come nye him. Thou art my defence in the trouble that is come aboute me, O compasse thou me aboute also with the ioye of delyueraunce.

1. 2. 3 Sela. I wil enforme the, and shewe the the waye wherin thou shalt go: I wil fasten myne eyes vpon the. Be not ye now like horses & mooles, which haue no vnderstandinge. Whose mowthes thou must holde with bytt & brydle, yf they wil not obeye the.

Grete plagies shall y^e vngodly haue, but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, mercy shall compasse him on every syde. Be glad (o ye righteous) and reioyse in the LORDE, be ioyfull all ye that are true of herte.

The XXXII. A psalme of David.

Reioyse in y^e LORDE (o ye righteous) for it becommeth well the iust to be thankfull. Praise the LORDE with harpe: synge psalmes vnto him with the lute and instrument of ten stringes. Singe him a new songe, yee synge lustely vnto him & with a good corage. For the worde of y^e LORDE is true, and all his workes are faithful. He loueth mercy & iudgment, y^e earth is full of the goodnesse of the LORDE. By the worde of the LORDE were the heauens made, & all the hostes of them by y^e breath of his mouth. He gathereth y^e waters together as it were in a bottell, & laieth vp the depe in secreete. Let all the earth feare the LORDE, and let all them that dwell in the wolde, stande in awe of him. For loke what he sayeth, it is done: and loke what he commaundeth, it standeth fast. The LORDE bringeth the counsell of the heithen to naught, and turneth the deuices of the people.

But the counsell of the LORDE endureth, and the thoughtes of his hert from generation to generacion. Blessed are the people that holde the LORDE for their God, & blessed are the folke whom he hath chosen to be his heretage. The LORDE looketh downe from heauen, & beholdeth all the children of men: from his stronge seate he considreth all them y^e dwell in the wolde. He only hath fashioned all the hertes of them, & knoweth all their workes. A kynge is not helped by his owne greate hoost, nerher is a giante saved thowrow the might of his owne strenght.

A horse is but a vayne thyng to saue a man, it is not the power of his strenght that can delyuer him. Beholde, the eye of the LORDE looketh vnto them that feare him, & put their trust in his mercy. That he maye delyuer their soules from death, and to fede them in the deare tyme. Let oure soules patiently abyde the LORDE, for he is oure helpe and shilde. So shal oure herte reioyse in him, because we haue hoped in his holy name. Let thy mercifull kyndnesse (o LORDE) be vpon vs, like as we put oure trust in the.

A Wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the LORDE, his prayse shal euer be in my mouth. My soule shal make hir boast in the LORDE: the poore oppressed shal heare therof, and be glad. O prayse y LOR DE with me, and let vs magnifie his name to gether. I sought the LORDE, and he her de me, yee he delyuered me out of all my fea
re. They that haue an eye vnto him, shal be lightened, & their faces shal not be asha
med. This poore man cried vnto the LOR DE, and he herde him, yee and delyuered him out of all his troubles. The angell of the LORDE pitcheth his tente rounde aboute
them that feare him, and delyuereth them.
O traist and se how frendly the LORDE is, blessed is the man y trusteth in him. O fea re the LORDE, ye y be his sayntes: for they that feare him, lacke nothinge. The rich shal want and suffre hunger, but they which seke the LORDE, shal wat no maner of thin ge, that is good. Come hither (o ye chil dren) herken vnto me, I wil teach you the fea re of the LORDE. Who so listeth to lyue, & wolde sayne se good dayes. Let him re frayne his tonge from euell, and his lippes that they speake no gyle. Let him eschue euell, and do good: Let him seke peace & en sue it. For the eyes of the LORDE are ouer
the righteous, and his eares are open vnto their prayers. But the face of the LORDE beholdeth them that do euell, to destroye the remembraunce of them out of the earth.

When the righteous crie, the LORDE heareth them, and delyuereth the out of all their troubles. The LORDE is nye vnto them y are contrite in hert, & wil helpe soch
as be of an humble sperte. Greate are y trou bles of the righteous, but the LORDE dely uereth them out of all. He kepeth all their bones, so y not one of them is broken. But misfortune shal slaye the vngodly, and they that hate y righteous shal be giltye. The LORDE delyuereth the soules of his serua

shal not offende.

gin myschese for me. Let the be as y dust before the wynde, and the angell of the LOR DE scaterynge the. Let their waye be dar ke and slippery, and the angell of the LORDE to persecute them. For they haue pryuely laied their nett to destroye me without a cau se, yee and made a pitte for my soule, which I neuer deserued. Let a sodane destruccio come vpon him vnawarres, and y nett that he hath layed priuely, catch him self, that he maye fall in to his owne myschese. But let my soule be ioyfull in the LORDE, and reioy se in his helpe. All my bones shal saie: LOR DE, who is like vnto the? which delyuerest y poore from those that are to stronge for him,
yee the poore and the neddy from his robber.

False witnesses are rysen vp, & laye to my charge thinges that I knowe not. They rewarde me euell for good, to the greate dis comfort of my soule. Neuertheles, when they were sicke, I put on a sack cloth: I hum bled my soule with fastinge, and my prayer turned in to myne owne bosome. I beha ued myself as though it had bene my frende or my brother, I wete heuely, as one y mour neth for his mother. But in my aduersite they reioyse, and gather them together: yee
y very lame come together agaynst me vna warres, makinge mores at me, & ceasse not.

With y greby & scomefull ypocrites, they gnasshed vpon me with their ceth. LOR DE, whan wilt thou loke vpo this? O res tore my soule from y wicked rumoure of the,
my dearlinge from the lyons. So wil I ge ue y thankes in the greate congregacion, & prayse the amenge moch people. O let the not triumphe over me, that are myne enemies for naught: O let them not wyncke w their eyes, that hate me without a cause. And why? their comonyng is not for peace, but they ymagin false wordes agaynst y outcas tes of the londe. They gape vpon me w their mouthes, sayenge: therethere: we se it with oure eyes. This thou seist, o LORDE:
holde not thy tonge the: go not farre fro me,
o LORDE. Awake (LORDE) and stonde vp: auenge thou my cause, my God, and my LORDE. Judge me (o LORDE my God) acordinge to thy righteousness, y they triu phe not ouer me. O let the not saye in the ir hertes: there there, so wolde we haue it. O let them not saye: we haue ouercome him.

Let them be put to confucion and shame, and reioyse, that fauoure my rightuous dealinge: yee let them saye all waye: blessed be y^e LORDE, which hath pleasure in the prosperite of his seruaunt. And as for my tonge, it shall be talkynge of thy rightuousnes and of thy prayse, all the daye longe.

The XXXV. A psalme of David.

A hert sheweth me the wickednesse of the vngodly, that there is no feare of God before his eyes. For he dyssembleth before his face, so longe till his abhominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrightuousnesse and disceate, he wil not be lerned to do good.

He ymagineth myschefe vpon his bedde, he wil come in no good waye, ner refuse the chynge that is euell. Thy mercy (O LORDE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faithfulness vnto the cloudes. Thy rightuousnesse stondech like the stronge mountaynes, and thy iudgment like the greates depe.

Thou LORDE prseruest both mē and bestes. How precious is thy mercy (O God) that the children of men maye put their trust vnder y^e shadowe of thy wynges. They shal be satisfied with the plēteousnesse of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. For by this is y^e well of life, and in thy light, shall we se light. O spiede forth thy louynge kyndnesse vnto them that knowe the, and thy rightuousnes vnto the that are true of hert. O let not the fote of pryde ouertakeme, O let not the hande of y^e vngodly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, and are not able to stode. The XXXVI. A psalme of David.

Not thy self at the vngodly, be not thou envious agaynst the euell doers. For they shall soone be cut downe like y^e grasse, and be wythered even as y^e grene herbe. Put thou thy trust in y^e LORDE, and he doinge good: so shalt thou dwell in the londe, and verely it shal fede the. Delyte thou in the LORDE, and he shal geue the thy hertes desyre. Committe thy waye vnto y^e LORDE, see thy hope in him, and he shal brynge it to passe. See he shall make thy rightuousnesse as cleare as the light, and thy iust dealinge as the noone daye. Holde the still in y^e LORDE, and abyde paciēly vpon him: but greue not thy self at one that hath prosperite, and lyueth in abhominacion. Leave of from wrath, let go displeasure, let not thy gelousy moue the also to do euell. For wicked doers shal be roted out, but they that paciētly abyde the LORDE, shal enheret the londe.

Suffre yet a litle whyle, and y^e vngodly shal

be clene gone: thou shalt loke after his place, and he shal be awaye. But the meke spreted shal possesse the earth, and haue pleasure in much rest. The vngodly layeth waye for the iust, and gnaseth vpon him wth his tethe.

But y^e LORDE laugheth him to scorne, for he seith y^e his daye is cominge. The vngodly drawe out the swerde and benche their bowe, to cast downe y^e symple and poore, and to slaye soch as go y^e right waye. Neuertheles, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shal be broke. A small chynge y^e the rightuous hath, is better then greates riches of the vngodly. For the armes of y^e vngodly shal be broken, but the LORDE vpholdeth the rightuous. The LORDE knoweth the dayes of the godly, and their enheritaunce shal endure forever. They shal not be cofounded in y^e perlonus tyme, and in y^e dayes of death they shal haue ynough. As for y^e vngodly, they shall perishe: and whē y^e enemies of y^e LORDE are in their floures, they shal consume, yee euen as the smoke shal they consume awaye. The vngodly borroweth and payeth not a gayne, but the rightuous is mercifull and liberrall. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: and they whom he curseth, shal be roted out. The LORDE ordieth a good mans goynge, and hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him wth his hande. I haue bene yonge, and now am olde: yet sawe I neuer the rightuous forsake, ner his seide to seke their bried. The rightuous is euer mercifull, and leueth gently, therfore shal his seide be blessed. Glefydenell, and do y^e chynge that is good, so shalt thou dwell forever.

For y^e LORDE loueth y^e chynge y^e is right, he forsaketh not his sayntes, but they shal be prserued for evermore: as for the seide of the vngodly, it shal be roted out. See the rightuous shal possesse y^e lode, and dwell therein forever. The mouth of the rightuous is exercised in wysdome, and his tōge talketh of iudgment. The lawe of his God is in his hert, therfore shal net his fote stepes slyde. The vngodly seyth the rightuous, and goeth about to slaye him. But the LORDE wil not leaue him in his hōdes, ner cōdemne him when he is iudged. Hopethou in the LORDE, and kepe his waye: and he shal so promote the, that thou shalt haue the lode by enheritaunce, and se, when the vngodly shall perishe. I myself haue sen the vngodly in greates power, and flourishinge like a grene baye tre: but when I wente by, lo, he was gone: I sought him, but he conde nō where be founde.

The Psalter.

Kepe innocency, and take hede vnto the thinge that is right, for that shall bringe a man peace at the last. As for the trasgresours, they shal perishe together, and the vngodly shal be roted out at y last. The helpe of the rightuous commeth of the LORDE, he is their strength in the tyme of trouble. B Ome not to rebuke (O LORD) in thine anger: O chasten me not in thy heuy displeasure. For thy arrowes stick fast in me, and thy honde presseth me sore. There is no whole parte in my body, because of thy displeasure: there is no rest in my bones, by reason of my synnes. For my wickednesses are gone over my heade, and are like a sore burthen, to heuy for me to beare.

My woundes styncke & are corrupte, thow my foolishnesse. I am brought into so greate trouble and misery, that I go mourninge all the daye longe. For my loynes are clene dried vp, and there is no whole parte in my body. I am feble and sore synntē, I roare for the very disquietnes of my hert.

LORDE, thou knowest all my desyre, & my gronyng is not hyd from the. My hert paunteth, my strength hath fayled me, & the light of myne eyes is gone from me. My loners & frendes stonde loyng upon my trouble, and my kynsmen are gone a farre of.

For in the (O LORD) is my trust, thou shalt heare me, O LORD my God. My desyre is, yf myne enemies triumphe ouer me: for yf my fote slippe, they reioyse greatly against me. I am redy to suffre trouble, and my heynesse is euer in my sight. For I confesse my wickednesse, & my synne greuethe me.

But myne enemies lyne, and are mightier: and they that hate me without a cause, are many in nombre. They that reward me euell for good, speake euell of me, because I folowe the thinge that good is. For sake me not (O LORD my God): O go not farre from me. Haist the to helpe me, O LORD my succoure.

And now LORDE, wherin shall I comforte me? my hope is in the. Deliuer me from all myne offences, and make me not a scoone vnto the foolish. I kepe sylence, and open not my mouth, for thou hast done it. Turne thy plagis awaye from me, for I am consumed thow the feare of thy hade. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, these yf set more by the couenaunt then by any offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his righteuousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprove the not because of thy sacrifice, yf burnt offerings are allwaye before me. I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner goates out of thy foldes. For all the bestes of the filde are myne, and thousandes of catell vpon the hilles.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges, and shuldest euer come when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the treuth, and hast shewed me secreete wysdome. Mercie me, o God, according to thy mercie, and I shall be cleane.

Wash thou me, and I shall be whiter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face from my synnes, and put out all my mysdedes. Make me a cleane hert (o God) and renew a right spire within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy spire from me. O geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablish me with thy fre spire. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloudgyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy righteuousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

For yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde geue it the: but thou delytest not in burnt offerings. The sacrifice of God is a troubled spire, a broken and a contrite hert (o God) shalt thou not despise. O be favourable and gracious vnto Sion, that the walles of Ierusalem maye be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of righteuousnesse, with the burnt offerings and oblations: then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine altare.

Psalm. 11. a
Rom. 1. b
The foolish bodies saye in their herres: Tush, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abhominable in their wickednesse: there is not one, that doth good. God looked downe from heaven vpon the children of men, to se yf there were any that wolde vnderstande, or seke after God. But they are all gone out of y waye, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none y doth good, no not one. How can they haue vnderstandinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bred, & call not vpon God? They are a frayd, where no feare is: for God breake the bones of them that beseege the: thou puttest them to confusyon, for God despiseth them. Oh yf the sauynge healeth were geuen vnto Israel out of Sion: Oh that the LORDE wolde deliuer his people out of captiuitee. Then shulde Jacob reioyse, & Israel shulde be right glad.

Alpeme (O God) for thy names sake, and deliuer me in thy strēgth. Heare my prayer (O God) conside the wordes of my mouth. For straungers are ryssen vp agaynst me, and the mightie (which haue not God before their eyes) seke after my soule. Sela. But lo, God is my helper: it is he that vpholdeth my soule. He shall rewarde euell vnto myne enemies, and in thy trowth shalt thou destroye them. A fre wil offeringe wil I geue the, and prayse thy name O LORDE, because it is so comfortable.

For thou hast deliuered me out of all my trouble, so that myne eye seyth his desyre vpon myne enemies.

2 Heare my prayer (O God) and hyde not thy self from my petition. Take heede vnto me and heare me, how piteously

The liiiij. psalme. Ps. xxi.

I mourne & cōplayne. The enemy crieth so, & the vngodly cōmmech on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschefe, so maliciously are they set agaynst me. My heart is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a dove, that I might fle somwhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroye their tonges (O LORDE) and denye them, for I se vnrightrousnes & strife in y cite. This geeth daye and might aboute the walles, myschefe and vyce are in the myddest of it.

Wickednesse is therin, disceate and gyle go not out of hir stretes. If it were myne enemy that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell will dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. But it is thou my companion, my gyde and myne owne famuler frēde. We had swete and secreete communicacion together, and louyn gly walked we together in y house of God.

Let death come hastely vpon them, and let them go downe quic into hell, for wickednes is amonge them in their dwellinges.

As forme, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shall helpe me. In the eueninge, mornynge and at noone daye wil I mourne and cōplayne: and he shal heare my voyce.

It is he that deliuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite forme: for they are many agaynst me. Reueen God that endureth for ever, shal heare me, and brynge them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why: they feare not God. See they laye hondes vpon soch as be at peace with him, and so thei breake his couenaunt. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. Cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal nourish the, and not leane the righteous in vnquietnesse. But as for them, thou (O God) shalt cast them downe into the pitte of destruction. When so euer I call vpon the, myne enemies are put to flight: wherby I knowe, that thou art my God. In Gods worde wil I reioyse, in the LORDES worde wil I comforte me. Yee in God do I trust, & am not afrayd: what can man the do vnto me? Vnto the (o God) wil I paye my vowes, vnto y wil I geue thākes & prayse. Hyde not thy face from thy seruaunt, for I am in trouble: O haist y to helpe me. Drawe nye vnto my soule, and saue it: Oh delyuer me because of myne enemies. Thou knowest my reprofe, my shame & my dishonour: my aduersaries are all in thy sight. The rebuke breeth my hert, & maketh me heuy: I loke, for some to haue pitie vpon me, but there is no man: & for some to comfort me, but I fynde none. They gaue me gall to eate, & when I was thirstie, they gaue me vynerger to drynke.

I was greued at y wicked, to set the vngodly
in such prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plagued like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puffed vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with cruelte and vnrightheousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therfore fall the people vnto them, and there ouercome they no small auantage. Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceave it? is there knowlege in the most hyest? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospere in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then clense my hert in wayne (thought I) & wash
my handes in innocency? Wherfore shul-de I be then punyshed daylie, & be chastened euerie momyng? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children.
Then thought I to vnderstande this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I were in to y Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of these men. Namely, how thou hast set the in a slippery place, that thou maiest cast the downe headlynges & destroye the. O how so-denly do they consume, perish, & come to a fear-full ende? Yee euen like as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thou their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, & it wente euen thorow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignorant, and as it were a beest before the. Neuerthelesse, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou leddest me with thy councel, and afterwarde receavest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen: there is no thinge vpo earth, that I besyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my herte sayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. For lo, they that forsake the, shal perishe, thou destroyest
all them that committe fornicacion agaynst
the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put my trust in the L O R D E God, and to speake of all thy workes.

Treade vpon them with thy fete, & cast them downe to the grounde, for the enemy hath destroyed all together in the Sanctuary. Thy aduersaries reare in thy houses, & set vp their banners for tokens. Men maye see the ares glister aboue, like as those that here in the wood. They cutt downe all the sylinge worke of y^e Sanctuary wth bylles & ares. They haue set fyre vpon y^e Sanctuary they haue defiled y^e dwellinge place of y^e name, eue vnto the grounde. Yet they saye in the ir hertes: Let vs spoyle the all together, thus haue they brient vp all the houses of God in the londe. We se oure tokens no more, there is not one prophet more, no not one that vnderstandeth eny more. Oh God, how longe shal the aduersary do this dishonoure: how longe shal the enemye blaspheme thy name? for euer? Why withdrawest thou thine honde? why pluckest thou not thy right hōde out of thy bosome, to consume thine enemies?

But God is my kynge of olde, the helpe that is done vpon earth he doeth it himself. Thou denydest y^e see thou ow thy power, thou breakest the heades of the dragons in the waters.

The daye is thine, & the night is thine: thou hast prepared the lightes & the Sonne. Thou hast set all y^e borders of the earth thou hast made both Summer & wynter.

Remembre this (o LORDE) how the enemye rebuketh, & how the foolish people blaspheme thy name. O deliuer not the soule of thy turtle dove vnto the beestes, & forget not the congregacon of the poore for euer. Loke vpon the couenaunt, for the darcke houses of the earth are full of wickednesse. For in the honde of the LORDE there is a cuppe full of stronge wyne, & he poureth out of the same: As for the dregges therof, all y^e vngodly of the earth shal drynke them, & sucke them out. But I wil talke of the God of Jacob, & prayse him for euer. All the homes of the vngodly will I breake, & y^e homes of the righteous shal be exalted.

Or, hath he shut up his louynge kyndnesse in displeasure? Sela. At the last I came to this poynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish? the right honde of the most hyest can chaunge all.

Therefore wil I remembre the workes of the LORDE, and call to mynde thy wonders of old tyme. I wil speake of all thy workes, and my talkynge shalbe of thy doinges.

They forgot what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egypte, euen in the felde of Zoan. He deuyled the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. In the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloaue the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greates deapth. He brought waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gushed out like the ryuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hyest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their hertes, and requyred meate for the. it lust. For they spake agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a tal le in the wilderness, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the watery streames gushed out, and the streames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and prouyde flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroch: so the fyre was kyndled in Jacob, and heny displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they beleued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he commaunded the cloudes aboue, and opened the doores of heauen. He rayned bowne Manna vpon them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then at the angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. He made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fetthered foules like the sonde of y see. He let it fall amonge their tētes rounde aboute their habitacions. So they ate & were fylled, for he gaue them their owne de fyre. They were not dispoyned of their lust.

But whyle y meate was yet in their mouthes: The heny wrath of God came vnto the, slewe y welchiest of the, & smote downe y chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, and beleued not his wonderous workes. Therefore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and soberly their yeares were gone. Hear o thou shepherde of Israel, thou y ledest Jacob like a flocke of shepe: shewe y self, thou y syttest vpon y The rubins. Before Ephraim, Bē Jamin & Manasses: stee vpon thy power & come helpe vs. Turne vs agayne (o God) shewe the light of thy countenance & we shal be whole. O LORDE God of hostes, how longe wilt thou be angrye ouer the prayer of thy people? Thou hast fed thē with the bred of teares, yee thou hast geuen thē plenteousnes of teares to drynke. Thou hast made vs a very strife vnto o' neighbours, & o' enemies laugh vs to scorne.

Turne vs agayne (thou God of hostes) shewe the light of thy countenance, & we shal be whole. Thou hast brought a vynyarde out of Egypte, thou didest cast out y Heithē, & plante it. Thou maydest rowme for it, & caused it to take rote, so y it fylled the lode. The hills were couered with the shadowe of it, & so were the stronge Cedretrees w' the bowes therof.

She stretched out hir braunches vnto the see, & hir bowes vnto the water: Why hast thou then broken downe hir hedge, that all they which go by, plucke of hir grapes?

The wilde boie out of the wod hath wunt it vp, & the beestes of the felde haue deuoured it. Turne y agayne (thou God of hostes) loke downe from heauen, beholde & viset this vynyarde. LORDE, thou art oure refuge from one generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or euer the earth & the wolde were made, thou art God from euylastinge and wolde without ende. Thou turnest man to destruction, Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne ye children of men. For a thousande yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

As soone as thou scatterest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye sodenly like the grasse. In the mornynge it is greene and groweth vp, but in the evenynge it is cutt downe and withered. For we consume awaye in thy displeasure, and are a frayed at thy wrothfull indignacion. Thou settest oure misteyes before the, and oure secreete synnes in the light of thy countenance. For when thou art angrie, all o^r dayes are gone, we brynge o^r yeares to an ende, as it were a taylor that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & though men be so stronge that they come to iij. score yeares, yet is their strength then but labour and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy feare full & terrible displeasure? O teach vs to remembre oure dayes, that we maye applie oure hertes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (O LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruantes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of our life. 1. Cor. 1. a

When I sayde: my fote hath slipped, thy mercy (O LORDE) helde me vp. In y multitude of the sorowes that I had in my herte, thy comfortes haue refreshed my soule.

Wilt thou haue any thinge to do with the stole of wickednesse, which ymagineth myschefe in the lawe? They gather them together agaynst the soule of the righteous, & condemne the innocent bloude. But the LORDE is my refuge, my God is the strenght of my confidēce. He shal recompence the their wickednesse, and destroyethem in their owne malice: yee the LORDE oure God shal destroye them.

Eph. 3. b

Come, let vs prayse the LORDE, let vs hertely reioyse in the strength of oure saluacion. Let vs come before his presence with thankesgeuyng, & shewe oure self glad in him w psalmes. For the LORDE is a greate God, and a greate kynge aboue all goddes. In his hende are all y comers of the earth, and the strength of the hilles is his also. The see is his, for he made it, and his hondes prepared the dnelōde.

O come, let vs worshipec and bowe downe oure selues: Let vs knele before the LORDE oure maker. For he is oure God: as for vs, we are the people of his pasture, and the shepe of his hōdes. Todaye yf ye wol heare his voyce, hardē not youre hertes, as whē ye prouoked in tyme of temptacion in the wilbernes. Where yō fathers cēpted me, proued me, and sawe my workes. XL. yeaes longe was I greued with that generacion, & sayde: they ener erre in their hertes, they verely haue not knowen my wayes. Therefore I sware vnto the in my wrath, that they shulde not enter into my rest.

1. Par. 17. a

Synge vnto the LORDE a new songe, synge vnto the LORDE all the whole earth. Synge vnto y LORDE, & prayse his name, be tellyng of his saluacion from daye to daye. Declare his honoure amonge the heithē, and his wonders amonge all people. For y LORDE is grea te, and can not worthely be praysed: he is mo re to be feared then all goddes. As for all y goddes of the heithē, they be but Idols, but it is the LORDE that made the heaues.

The XCVI. psalme.

The LORDE is kynge, the earth maye be glad therof: yee the multitude of the Idles maie be glad therof. Cloudes and darcknesse are rounde aboute him, rightuousnesse and iudgment are the habita cion of his seate. There goeth a fyre before him, to burne vp his enemies on every syde. His lightenynge geneth shynne vnto the worlde, the earth seyth it is a fraied. The hilles melt like wax at the presence of y LORDE, at the presence of the LORDE of the whole earth. The very heaues declare his rightuousnes, & all people se his glory. Cōfounde be all they that worshipec ymages, and delite in their Idols: worshipec him all ye goddes. Sion heareth of it and reioyseth: yee all y donghters of Iuda are glad because of thy iudgements, O LORDE. For thou LORDE art the most hrest ouer all the earth, thou art exalted farre aboue all goddes. O ye that loue the LORDE, se that ye hate the thinge which is enell: the LORDE preserveth the soules of his sayntes, he shal deliuer the from the honde of the vngodly. There is spronge vp a light for the righteous, and a ioyfull gladnesse for soch as be true herted.

Touch not myne anoynted, do my prophetes no harme. Moreover he called for a derth vpon the lōde, and destroyed all the prouysion of bried.

But he had sent a man before them, euen Joseph which was solde to be a bonde seruauant. They hurte his face in the stockes, they yron pearced his herte. de of Ham, and fearfull thinges in the reed see. So he sayde he wolde haue destroyed them, had not Moses his chosen stonde before him in y gappe: to turne awaie his wroth full indignacion, lest he shulde destroye the.

Yet they thought some of y pleasaunt londe, and gaue no credence vnto his worde.

But murmured in their tentes, and heretened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE.

Then lift he vp his honde agaynst them, to overthrowe them in the wilderness. To cast out their sede amonge the nacions, and to scatter them in the londes. They ioyned them selues vnto Baal Peor, and at the offerings of the deed. Thus they prouoked him vnto anger with their owne inuencions, and the plage was greates amonge them.

Then stode vp Phineas and executed iustice, & so the plage ceased. And that was counted vnto him for righteuousnesse, amonge all posterities for euermore. They angered him also at the waters of strife, so that Moses was punyshed for their sakes. We cause they prouoked his spiete, and he tolde the plainly with his lippes. Neither destroyed they the heithen, as the LORDE commaunded them. But were mingled amonge the heithen, and lerned their workes.

In so much that they worshipped their ymages, which turned to their owne decaye.

Yet they offred their sonnes & their daughters vnto deuils. Thus were they stayned w their owne workes, and wente a whoringe with their owne inuencions. Therefore was the wrath of the LORDE kyndled agaynst his people, in so much that he abhorred his owne enheritaunce. And gaue them ouer in to the honde of the heithen, and they that hated them, were lordes ouer them. Their enemies oppressed the, and had them in subiection. Many a tyme dyd he deliuer them, but they prouoked him with their owne inuencions, and were brought downe for their wickednesse. Neuerthelesse when he sawe their aduersite, he herde their complaynte. rael from euerlastinge and woulde without ende, and let all people saye: Amen, Amen. Halleluya. The Cvi. psalme.

Geeue thankes vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever. Let them geue thanks whom the LORDE hath redemed, & deliuered from the hande of the enemye. And gathered the out of the lombes, fro the east, fro the west, fro the north & from the south.

They wente astraye in the wildernesse in an vntroden waye, & founde no cite to dwell in. Hongrie & thirstie, & their soule faynted in the. So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, & he deliuered the from their distresse. He led the forth by y right waie, y they might go to y cite wherethey dwelt.

What men wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, & the wonders that he doth for the childre of men. For he satisfied the emptye soule, & fylled the hongrie soule w good.

Soch as sat in darcknesse and in the shadowe of death, beyng fast bounde in misery & yron. Because they were not obediēt to the comaundementes of God, but lightly regarded the counsell of the most highest.

Their herte was vexed with labo, they fell downe, & there was none to helpe them.

So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, & he deliuered them out of their distresse. He brought the out of darcknesse & out of the shadowe of death, & brake their bondes in sonder. What men wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, & the wonders that he doth for the childre of men. For he hath broken the gates of brass, & smitten the barres of yron in sonder. Foolish men were plagued for their offence, & because of their wickednesse. Their soule abhorred all manner of meate, they were euē harde at beathes doie. So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, & he deliuered the out of their distresse. He sent his worde & healed the, & saued the from destruction. What men wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, & the wonders that he doth for the children of men.

That they wolde offre vnto him the sacrifice of thankesgeuyng, and tell out his workes with gladnes. They that go downe to the see in shippes, & occupie their busynesse in greate waters. These men se the workes of the LORDE, & his wonders in the depe. For at his worde, the stormy wynde aryseth, and listeth vp the waves therof.

They are caried vp to the heauen, & downe agayne to the depe, their soule melteth awaye in the trouble. They relecte and fro, they stagger like a droncken man, and are at their wittes ende. So they crie vnto the LORDE in their trouble, & he deliuereth the out of their distresse. He maketh the storme to ceasse, so that the waves are still.

The are they glad because they be at rest, & so he bryngeth them vnto the haven where they wolde be. What men wolde prayse the goodnes of the LORDE, and the wonders that he doth for the children of men.

That they wolde exalte him in the cōgregation of the people, & loave him in the seate of the elders. Which turneth the floodes in to drie londe, and drieth vp the water sprynges. A frutesfull londe maketh he barren, for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein. Agayne, he maketh the wildernes a stonbinge water, and water sprynges of a drye ground. There he setteth the hongrie, that they maye buylde them a cite to dwell in. That they maye sowe their growde, plante vynyaydes, to yelde them frutes of increase. He blesteth them, so that they multiplie exceedingly, and suffreth not their catell to decrease. When they are minished & brought lowe thow oppressing, thow enuy plage or trouble. Though he suffreth to be euell intreated thow tyrantes, or let them wandie out of the waye in the wildernesse: Yet helpeth he the poore out of misery (at the last) and maketh him an housholde like a flocke of shepe. The righteous wil cōsidre this and reioyse, the mouth of all wickednesse shall be stopped. Who so is wyse, and pondereth these thinges well, shall understonde the longynge kyndnesse of the LORDE.

The Cviij. A psalme of David.

God, my hert is ready to synge, & to geue prayse. Awake (o my glory) awake lute & harpe, I myselfe will awake right early. I wil geue thanks vnto the (o LORDE) amonge the people, I wil synge prayses vnto the amonge the heith.

For the greatnesse of thy mercy is higher then the heauens, and thy faithfulness reacheth vnto the cloudes. See vp thy self (o God) aboue the heauens, & thy glory aboue all the earth. That thy beloued maye be deliuered: helpe them with thy right hande, & heare me. God hath spoken in his Sanctuary (which thinge reioyseth me.) I will denyde Sichem, and mete out the valley of Suchoth. Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strength of my heade, Juda is my captaine. Moab is my washpott, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue,

They that made them, are li. ke vnto them, and so are all soch as put their trust in them. But let Israel trust in y^e LORDE, for he is their succoure & defence. Let the house of Aaron put their trust in y^e LORDE, for he is their succoure & defence. They that feare the LORDE, let the put their trust in the LORDE, for he is their succoure and defence. The LORDE is mynde full of vs, & blesseth vs: he blesseth y^e house of Israel, he blesseth y^e house of Aaron. Rec he blesseth all them that feare the LORDE, both small & greate. O lerne me kyndnesse, nourture & knowlege, for I beleue thy commaundementes.

Matt. 19. c Before I was troubled, I wente wronge, but now I kepe thy worde. Thou art good and frendly, O teach me thy statutes.

The proude ymaginlyes vpon me, but I kepe thy commaundementes with my whole herte. Their herte is as far as bawne, but my delite is in thy lawe. It is good for me that I haue bene in trouble, that I maye lerne thy statutes. The lawe of thy mouth is dearer vnto me, then thousandes of golde & syluer. Jod.

A Thy handes haue made me and fashioned me, O geue me vnderstandunge, that I maye lerne thy commaundementes. They that feare the, wil be glad when they see me, because I put my trust in thy worde. I knowe (O LORDE) y thy iudgementes are righte, and y thou of very faithfulness hast caused me be troubled. O let thy mercifull kyndnesse be my comforte, acordinge to the promise that thou hast made vnto thy seruaunt. O let thy louynge mercies come vnto me, that I maye lyue, for thy lawe is my delyte. Let the proude be confounded, which handle so falsly agaynst me. But let such as feare the, & knowe thy testimonies, be turned vnto me. O let my herte be vndefyled in thy statutes, that I be not ashamed.

The LORDE preserveth the from all euell, yee it is the LORDE that kepeth thy soule. The LORDE preserveth thy goinge out and thy comynge in, from this tyme forth for euermore.

The CXXI. A psalme of Dauid.

I was glad, when they sayde vnto me: we wil go in to the house of the LORDE. Oure fete shal stonde in thy gates, O Jerusalem. Jerusalem is buylded as a cite, that is at vnice in it self. For there yf trybes go vp, euen the trybes of the LORDE: to testifie vnto Israel, to geue thankes vnto the name of the LORDE. For there is the seate of iudgement, and the seate of the house of Dauid. O praye for the peace of Jerusalem, they shal prosper that loue the. Peace be within yf walles, and pientousnes within thy palaces. For my biethren and companions sakes, I wil wish the prosperite. For because of yf house of the LORDE oure God, I wil seke to do the good.

The CXXII. psalme.

The CXXIII. psalme.

They that put their trust in yf LORDE, are euē as the mount Sion, which maye not be remoued, but stōdeth fast for euer. The hilles stonde aboute Jerusalem, euen so stōdeth the LORDE rounde aboute his people, fro this tyme forth for euermore. That the rodd of the vngodly come not in to the locc of the righteous, lest the righteous put their honde vnto wickednesse. Do wel (O LORDE) vnto those that be good and true of herte. As for such as turne backe vnto their owne wickednesse, the LORDE shal lede them forth with the euell doers: but peace be vpon Israel.

The CXXV. psalme

When the LORDE turneth agayne yf captiuyte of Sion, then shal we be like vnto them that dreame. The shal enre month be fylled with laughter, and oure tonge with ioye. Then shal it be sayed amonge the heithen: the LORDE hath done greater thinges for them. See the LORDE hath done greate thinges for vs already, wherof we reioyse. Turne oure captiuyte (O LORDE) as the ryuers in the south. They that sowe in teeres, shal reape in ioye. He yf now goeth his waye wepyge and beareth forth good seede, shal come agayne with ioye, and brynge his sheaves with him.

The CXXVI. A psalme of Salomen.

Excepte the LORDE buylde the house, their labour is but lost that buylde it. Excepte the LORDE kepe the cite, the watchman waketh but in vayne. It is but lost labour that yeryse vpearly, and take no rest, but eate the bred of carefulnesse: for loke to whom it pleaseth him, he geueth it in slepe. psal. 112.2 LORDE. For though the LORDE be hye, yet hath he respect vnto y lowly: as for y proude, he beholdeth him as farre off. Though I walke i y myddest of trouble, yet shalt thou refresh me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hande vpo the furiousnes of myne enemies, z y righthande shal saue me. The LORDE shal make good for me, yee thy mercy (o LORDE) endureth for ever: despise not then the worke of thine owne handes.

Job 14.6

The CXXXVIII. A psalme of David.

LORDE, thou searchest me out, and knowest me. Thou knowest my downefyrtinge z my vprisynge, thou vnde. stodest my thoughtes as farre of. Thou art aboute my path z aboute my bedd, z spyest out all my wayes. For lo, there is not a worde i my tōge, but thou (o LORDE) knowest it all together. Thou hast fashioned me be hynde z before, z layed thine hōde vpon me.

Soch knowlege is so wonderfull z excellēt for me, I can not atteyne vnto it. Whither shal I go then from thy spiere? Or, whither shal I fle from thy presence? If I clymme vp in to heauen, thou art there: yf I go downe to hell, thou art there also. If I take the wynges of the moynynge, z remayne in the vttemost parte of the see: Euen there also shal thy hande lede me, and thy right hande shal holde me. If I saye: peradventure the darcknesse shal couer me, then shal my myght be turned to daye. Yee the darcknesse is no darcknesse with the, but the night is as cleare as the daye, the darcknesse z light are boch alike. For my reynes are thyne, thou hast couered me in my mothers wombe. I wil geue chākes vnto the, for I am wōderously made: marvelous are thy workes, and that my soule knoweth right well. My bones are not hyd from the, though I be made secretly, and fashioned beneth in the earth.

Thine eyes se myne vnparfitnesse, they stonde all wittē i thy booke: my dayes were fashioned, when as yet there was not one of them. How deare are y cōcels vnto me o God? O how greate is the summe of them? If I tell them, they are mo in nombre then the sonde: when I wake vp, I am present with the. Wilt thou not slaye y wicked (oh God) that the blonder thyrlie myghte departe frome? For they speake vnrighthe of the, thine enemies exalte them selues presumptuously.

I hate them (o LORDE) that hate the, z I maye not awaye with those that ryse vp agaynst the. Yee I hate them right soie, therefore are they myne enemies. Trye me (o God) and seke the grounde of myne hert;

The CXXXIX. A psalme of David.

Elyner me (o LORDE) from the euell men, oh preserue me from the wicked men. Which ymagin myschese in their hertes, z sitte vp strise all the daye longe. They sharpen their tonges like a serpent, Adders poyson is vnder their lippes.

Sela. Repeme (o LORDE) from the hande of the vngodly, preserue me from the wicked men, which are purposed to ouerthrowe my goinges. The proude haue layed a snare for me, z spied a nett abroad with coardes, yee z sette trappes in my waye. Sela.

But my sayenge is vnto the LORDE: thou art my God, heare the voyce of my prayer o LORDE. O LORDE God, thou strength of my healt, thou hast couered my heade in y daye of battayll. Let not y vngodly haue his desyre (o LORDE) let him not haue his purpose, lest they be to proude. Sela. Let the myschese of their owne lippes fall vpon y head of the, y cōpase me aboute. Let hote burnynge coales fall vpo the, let the be cast in to the fyre, and in to the pytt, that they neuer ryse vp agayne. A man full of wordes shal not prospere vpon earth: a malicious z wicked person shal be hunted awaye and destroyed. Sure I am, that the LORDE wil auenge the poore, and maneyne the cause of the helpelesse. The righteous also shal geue chākes vnto thy name, z the iust shal continue in thy sight.

The CXL. A psalme of David.

LORDE, I call vpon the: haist the vnto me, and consider my voyce, whē I crie vnto the. Let my prayer be set forth in thy sight as the incēse, and let the liftinge vp of my handes be an enenyngge sacrifice. Set a watch (o LORDE) before my mouth, yee a watch at the dore of my lippes. O let not myne hert be enclyned to eny euell thīge, to be mynded as the vngodly or wicked men, lest I eate of soch thinges as please the.

Let the righteous (rather synne me frendly, and reprove me: so wil I take it, as though he had poured oyle vpo my heade: it shal not hurte my heade, yee I wil praye yet for their wickednesse. Their indges stōble at the stone, yet heare they my wordes, yf they be ioyfull. Oure bones lye scatered before y pytt, like as when one graueth and dyggeth vp the grounde. But myne eyes loke vnto y, o LORDE God: in the is my trust, oh cast not out my soule. Repeme frō y snare which

The CXL. A psalme of Dauid.

Crie vnto the LORDE with my voyce, yee enē vnto the LORDE do I make my supplicacion. I poure out my complaynte before him, and shewe him of my trouble. When my spere is in heuynesse, for thou knowest my path, and the waye where in I walke, haue they piously layed a snare for me. I loke vpon my right honde, & se, there is no man that wil knowe me. I haue no place to fle vnto, no man careth for my soule. Therefore do I crie vnto the (o LORDE) and saye: thou art my hope and my porciō, in the londe of the lyuynge. Considre my complaynte, for I am brought very lowe. Oh delyuer me fro my persecuters, for they are to stronge for me: Brynge my soule out of prison, that I maye geue thākes vnto thy name: which thinge yf thou wilt graunte me, then shal the righteous resorte vnto my cōpany.

The CXLII. A psalme of Dauid.

Hear my prayer (o LORDE) considre my desyre: answer me for thy treuth & righteousnesse sake. And entre not in to iudgment with thy seruante, for in thy sight shal no man lynyng be iustified. For the enemye persecuteth my soule, he smyreceth my life downe to the grounde, he layeth me in the darcknesse, as the deed men of the world. Therefore is my spere vexed within me, and my herte within me is desolate. Yet do I remembre the tymes past, I muse vpo all yf workes, yee I exercise my self in the workes of chy hondes. I stretch forth my hondes vnto the, my soule crieth vnto the out of the thystlelonde. Sela. Hear me (o LORDE) and that soone, for my spere waxeth faynte: hyde not y face from me, lest I be like vnto the that go downe in to the graue. Oh let me heare thy louynge kyndnesse by tymes in the mornynge, for in the is my trust: shewe thou me the waye that I shulde walke in, for I lift vp my soule vnto the. Delyuer me (o LORDE) from myne enemies, for I resorte vnto the.

Teach me to do the thinge that pleaseth the, for thou art my God: let thy louynge spere lede me forth vnto the londe of righteousness. Quycē me (o LORDE) for thy names sake, and for thy righteousness sake brynge my soule out of trouble. And of thy goodnesse scatter myne enemies abroad, and destroye all them that vex my soule, for I am thy seruant.

The CXLIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Blessed be the LORDE my refuge, which teacheth my hādes to warke, & my fyngers to fight. My hope and my castell, my defence and my delyuerer, my shyld in whom I trust, which gouerneth the people that is vnder me. LORDE, what is mā, that thou hast soch respecte vnto him? Or the sonne of man, that thou so regardest him? Man is like a thinge of naught, his tyme passeth awaye like a shadowe. Where thy heauē (o LORDE) & come downe, touch the mountaynes, yf they maye smoke with all.

Send forth the lightenyng & scatter the, shute out thine arrowes and consume them. Send downe thine hande from aboue, delyuer me and take me out of yf greete waters, from the hande of straunge childre. Whose mouth talketh of vanite, & their right hande is a right hande of falsede. That I maye synge a new songe vnto the (o God) & synge prayses vnto the vpon a ten stringed lute, Thou that geuest victory vnto kynge, and hast delyuered Dauid thy seruant from the parell of the swerde. Saue me and delyuer me from the honde of straunge childre, whose mouth talketh of vanite, and their right hande is a right hande of falsede. That o' sonnes maye growe vp as the yōge plantes, and that oure daughters maye be as the polished comers of the temple. That o' garners maye be full and plenteous with all maner of store: that o' shepe maye brynge forth thousandes and hundred thousandes in oure villages. That oure oxen maye be stronge to laboure, that there be no myschaunce, no decaye, and no complayninge in oure stretes.

Happy are the people that be in soch a case: yee blessed are the people, which haue the LORDE for their God.

The CXLIII. A psalme of Dauid.

I wil magnifie the (o my God & kynge) I wil praise y name for ever & ever. Every daye wil I geue thanks vnto the, and praise y name for ever and ever. Great is the LORDE, & marvelous wrothy to be praysed, there is no ende of his greatness. One generacion shal praise thy workes vnto another, and deciare thy power. As for me I wil betake me of thy worshippe, thy glory, thy prayse and wondrous workes.

- Chap. III. He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience: he commendeth wysdome, & requyret us to cleue vnto the same.
- Chap. IIII. A fatherly exortacion vnto wysdome with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the members of oure body fro euill.
- Chap. V. He exorteth vnto wysdōe, and to be warre of harlottes: he telleth what harme maye folowe therout, whē men medle with soch: he teacheth men, lonyngly to cleue vnto their married wyues, and describeth the ende of the vngodly.
- Chap. VI. He warneth men to beware of suerishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to laboure, sheweth the wilddnesse of false tonges, and requyret men to beware of aduourty, because it is more perloous then theft or felony.
- Chap. VII. He exorteth vnto wysdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt happeneth vnto soch as encline to the prouocaciōs and desyres of the flesh.
- Chap. VIII. Wysdome calleth men sweetely vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wysdome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vnto her.
- Chap. IX. Wysdome crieth vpo the ignorant, and promiset them greate thinges. The foolish maner of a light woman.
- Chap. X. From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are describēd many swete, lovely and wysē sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it: Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurte therof.
- Chap. XXXI. Wysdome warneth us to beware of euell women, and describeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behauioure of an honest married wyfe.

W some, forget not my lawe, but se þ̄ thine hert kepe my comaundementes. For they shal prologe þ̄ dayes 2 yeares of þ̄ lyfe, 2 brynge þ̄ peace. Let mercy 2 faithfulness neuer go from þ̄ : bynde the about þ̄ necke, 2 wyte them in the tables of thine herte. So shalt thou fynde fauour and good vnderstandinge in þ̄ sight of God and men. Put thy trust in þ̄ L O R D E with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordre thy goynges. My sonne, despise not the chastenynge of þ̄ L O R D E, nether saynte when thou art rebuked of him. For whō the L O R D E loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him enen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wysdome, 2 opreyneth vnderstandinge, for the gettinge of it is better then enymarchaundise of syluer, 2 the profit of it is better then golde. Wysdome is more worth the precious stones, 2 all þ̄ thinges þ̄ thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, 2 vpon hir lefthande is riches 2 hono.

The iiij. Chap.

For the L O R D E shal be besyde the, 2 kepe thy fote þ̄ thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shulde haue it, so longe as thine hande is able to do it. Saye not vnto thy neighbour: go thy waye 2 come agayne, tomorrow wil I geue the: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neighbour, seynge he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Strive not lightly w̄ eny man, where as he hath done þ̄ no harme. Followe not a wicked man, and chose none of his wayes: for the L O R D E abhorreth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the L O R D E is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellinges of the righteous. As for the scornefull, he shal laugh the to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. Make moch of her, and she shal promote the: See yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge the vnto honoure.

nether take they eny rest, excepte they haue first done some harme. For they eat the bread of wickednesse, and drinke the wyne of robbery. The path of the righteous shyneth as the light, and is euer bghter & bghter vnto the perfecte daye. But y waye of the vngodly is as the darcknesse, wherein mē fall, or they be awarre.

E My sonne, marcke my wordes, and encline thine eare vnto my saynges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. For they are life vnto all those that finde thē, and health vnto all their bodie. Kepe thine hert with all diligence, for there vpon hangeth life.

Put awaye from the a frowarde mouth, and let the lippes of slander be farre from the. Let thine eyes beholde the thinge y is right, & let thine eye lyddes loke straight before the.

D Pōdre the path of thy fete, so shal all y wayes be sure. Turne not asyde, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte, but withholde thy fete from euell.

The V. Chapter.

M Some, geue hede vnto my wysdome, & bowe thine eare vnto my prudence: y thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe muroure.

E For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge honny combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at y last she is as bitter as worm wood, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir stepes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vnstedfast are hir wayes, that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therfore (o my sonne) and departe not frō the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye y doores of hir house. That thou geue not thine hono^r vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell.

B That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, & that thy labours come not in a straunge house. Reet that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes) and then saye: Alas, why hated I muroure? why dyd my hert despyse correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, & herkened not vnto them that in foumed me? I am come almost in to all myffortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Dinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne sprynges. Let y welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, & not straungers with the.

The vi. Chap. Fo. xxxix.

Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Koo: let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another womā? For euery mā's wayes are open in the sight of the LORDE, and he pōdereth all their goinges. The wickednesse of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greate foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The VI. Chapter.

M Some, yf thou be suertie for y neghboure, thou hast fastened thine hōde wth another mā: yee thou art bounde with thine owne wordes, and taken wth thine owne speach. Therfore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come i to y neghbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, & intreate thy neghboure: let not thine eyes slepe, ner thine eye lyddes slomber. Saue thy self as a doo frō y honde, & as a byrde frō the hōde of the fouler. Go to the Lemmet (thou slogarde) cōsidie hir wayes, & lerne to be wyse.

She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, & gathereth hir foode together i y harvest. How longe wilt thou slepe, thou slogish mā? Whā wilt thou aryse out of thy slepe? Ree slepe on still a litle, slōber a litle, foldethine handes together yet a litle, that thou mayest siepe: so shal pouerte come vnto the as one y trauayleth by the waye, & necessite like a wapened man. A dissemblynge person, a wicked man goeth with a frowarde mouth: he wyndeth with his eyes, he tokeneth wth his fete. he poynteth wth his fynghers, he is euer ymagyninge myschese & frowardnesse in his hert, & causeth discorde. Therfore shal his destruccion come hastely vpo him, sodenly shal he be all to broken, and not be healed.

There be sixe thinges, which the LORDE hateth, & the seventh he utterly abhorreth: A proude loke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte y goeth aboute wth wicked ymaginaciōs, fete that be swift in remynge to do myschese, a false wytnesse y bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amenge brithren. My sonne, kepe thy fathers cōmaundemētes, & forsake not y lawe of thy mother. Put thē vpt together in thine herte, and bynde thē aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art aslepe, & y when Psalm 118. 6 thou awakest, thou mayest talke of the (For the commaundment is a lanterne, and the lawe a light: yee chastenynge & nurtoure is y waye of life) that they maye kepe the fro the euell woman, & from the flaterynge tonge of the harlott: y thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be take w hir fayre lo kes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bried, but a married woman wil hunt for y pre cious life. Maye a man take fyre in his be some, and his clothes not be brient? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth in to his neighbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. Men do not vterly despyse a thefe, that stealeth to satysfye his soule, when he is hungerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seven tymes as much, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so comitteth aduoutrie with a womā, he is a fool, and bryngeth his life to destruccien. He getteth hym self also shame & dishonour, soch as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wrach of the mā wil not be itreated, no though thou woldest ofe him greate giftes to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

Wyndethem vpon thy fyngete, & wyte the in the table of thine herte. Saye vnto wys domer: thou art my sister, and call vnderston dinge thy kynswoman: that she maye kepe y fro y straunge womā, & fro y harlot which ge ueth screte wordes. For out of the wyndewe of my house I loked thorow the trellies, & behelde the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge soole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye to ward the harlottes house in the twylyght of of the enenynge, when it begāne now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a dis ceatfull, wāton & an vnstedfast womā: whose fete conde not abyde in y house, now is she without, now i y stretes, & lurketh i euery cor ner) she caught y yonge mā, kyssed him & was not ashamed, sayēge: I had a vow to paye, & this daye I perfourme it. Therefore came I forth to meete the, that I might see thy face, and lo I haue founde the. I haue deckt my bed with couerynge & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrrour, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye toge ther, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of mo neye with him, who can tell whē he cometh heme? Thus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flateringe lip pes she wanne him.

Immediatly he foloweth her, as it were an oxeled to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where foolcs are punysshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir dart: like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parcell of his life ly eth there vpon. Heare me now therefore (o my sonne) and marcke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaued in hir pathes. For many one hath she wounded and cast downe, yre many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Hir house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

The VIII. Chapter.

2 W oth not wysdome crie: doth not vnderstondinge put forth hir voyce? Stondeth she not in the hye places in the stretes & wayes: doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childre of me) lift I vp my voyce. Take heede vnto knowle ge o ye ignorant, be wysc in herte o ye foolcs. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate mat ters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkynge of y truethe, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are righteous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therein. They are all playne to soch as wil vndersto de, & right to the that fynde knowlege. Re ceane my doctryne therfore and not syluer, & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdo me is more worth then precious stoncs, yee all the thinges that thou castt by syde, are not to be compared vnto it.

I wysdome haue my dwellynge w know ledge, and prudent counsell is myne crowne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and y eschuyng of euell. As for pryde, disdain, an euell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wic ked thinges, I vterly at home the. I can ge ue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnder stondinge, I haue strength.

Therow me, kynges reigne: therow me, pri ces make iust lawes. Therow me, lordcs beare rule, and all iudges of y earth execute iudg mēt. I am louynge vnto those that loue me, and they that seeke me early, shal fynde me.

Salomons Prouerbes

Riches & honoure are wth me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is better thē golde & precious stone, & myne encrease more worth then fyne syluer. I walke in y^e waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudgment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that lone me, & to encrease their treasure.

E The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnyng of his wayes, or euer he began his woikes aforetyme. I haue bene ordered frō everlastige, & frō y^e begynnyng or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundations of y^e mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. For when he made the heauens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordie: whan he hanged the cloudes aboue: whan he fastened the sprynges of the deepe: Whan he shutt the see within certayne howndes, that y^e waters shulde not go ouer their marches. When he layed the foundations of the earth, I was with him, ordyng all thynges, delytyng daylie & reioysyng all waye before him. As for the route cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my delyte is to be amōge the children of men.

Therfore harken vnto me (o ye children) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nurrour, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is y^e man that heareth me, watchyng daylie at my gates, & geuyng attendaunce at the postes of my doores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal opeayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The IX. Chapter.

Wisdom hath buylded herself an house, and hewen out seven pilers: she hath slaughterd, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crye vpo the hyest place of the cite: Who so is ignorant, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bred, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. Forsake ignorance, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstandyng.

Who so reproveth a scornefull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, stayneth himself.

The x Chap. Ho. xl.

Reproue not a scorner, lest he owe the euell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil loue the. Geue a discrete man but an occasion, & he wil be the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome, & the knowlege of holy thynges is vnderstandyng. For thouow me y^e dayes shalbe prolonged, and the yeares of thy life shalbe many. If thou be wyse, y^e wysdome shal do y^e selfe good: but yf thou chynkest some thereof, it shalbe thine owne harme. A foolish restless woman, full of wordes, and soch one as hath no knowlege, syteth in the doores of hir house vpo a stole above in the cite, to call soch as go by and walke straight in their wayes. Who so is ignorant (sayeth she) let him come hither, and to the vnwyse she sayeth: stollen waters are swete, & the bred that is preuely eaten, hath a good taist.

But they cōsider not that death is there, and that hir gastes go downe to hell.

The X. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

Wyse sonne maketh a glad father, but an vndiscrete sonne is the heuynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wickedly gotten, profite nothinge, but rightuousnesse delynereth from death. The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth y^e vngodly frō his desyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quicke laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Sommer, is wyse: but he that is slothful in haruest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louyng and fauorable is the face of the rightuous, but y^e foreheade of the vngodly is past shame, and presumptuous. The memonall of the iust shal haue a good repote, but the name of the vngodly shal stycke. A wyse man wil receaue warnyng, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face. He that leadech an innocent life, walketh surely: but who so goeth a wroge waye, shalbe knowne. He y^e wynketh with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shalbe beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but y^e mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vp strife, but lone couereth y^e multitude of synnes.

In y^e lippes of him y^e hath vnderstandyng a mā shal fynde wysdome, but y^e redde belōgeth to y^e backe of y^e foolisly. Wyse mē laye vpon knowlege, but y^e mouth of y^e foolisly is nye destruction. The rich mā's goodes are his first

An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothynge worth. The lippes of the righteous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne folly. The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for carefull trauayle, it doth nothynge therto. The righteous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, but y vngodly shal not remayne in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but rightuousnesse deliuereth frō death. The rightuousnes of y innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. his hope is gone, the confydence of riches shal perish. The righteous shalbe deliuered out of trouble, & the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thorow y mouth of y dyssembler is his neyghboure destroyed, but thorow knowlege shal the iust be deliuered. When it goeth well with the righteous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but when the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slander of his neyghboure, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. A dyssemblynge person wil discover preuy chynge, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. Where no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealth. He that is suertye for a straunger, hurteth himself: but he that medleth not with suerteshippe, is sure. A gracious wemaunteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne ryches. The labour of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth rightuousnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as rightuousnes bryngeth life, euē so to cleue vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. A fayre woman without discrete manners, is like a ryng of golde in a swynes snout. The iust labour for peace and tranquylite, but the vngodly for disquyetnesse.

Some man getteth out his goodes, and is the richer, but y nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothynge, and yet is euer in pouerte. He that is lyberall in genynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vp his come shalbe cursed amonge the people: but blessinge shal lichte vpon his heade that selleth it. He that labourerth for honesty syndeth his desyre: but who so seeketh a secret myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. The XII. Chapter.

A ho so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformed: but he that hateth to be reprovèd, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORD, but a wicked wyll he condempne. A man can not endure in vngodlynesse, but the rote of a righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir husbonde: but she that beaucth herself vnonestly, is a corruption in his bones. The thoughtes of a righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkyng of the vngodly is, how they maye laye wayte for bloude, but the mouth of a righteous wil deluyner them. Ouer thou canst turne the aboute, the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stode.

A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despyed. A simple man which laboureth and worketh, is better then one that is gorgeous and wanteth bred.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his catell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. He that tilleth his lode, shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth ydolnes, is a very foole. The desyre of a vngodly hunteth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. The wicked falleth in to the snare thow he maye of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Every man shal enioye good according to the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his handes shal he be rewarded. Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wil be couceled. A foole uttereth his wrath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgeneth wronge. A iust man will tell the trueth, and sheweth the thinge that is right: but a false wytnesse disceaueth. A slanderous personne pricketh like a swerde, but a wyse mans tongue is wholsome. A true mouth is ever constant, but a dyssemblinge tongue is soone chaunged. They that ymagin euell in their mynde, wil disceane: but the counselors of peace shal haue ioye folowinge the. There shal no mysfortune happen vnto the iust, but the vngodly shal be fylled with misery. The LORD abhorreth disceatfull lippes, but they that labour for treuth, please him. He that hath vnderstondinge, can hyde his wysdome: but an indiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligent hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Hery nesse discourageth the herte of man, but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberall vnto his neighbour, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceane them selues. A disceatfull man shal fynde no vantage, but he that is content with that he hath, is more worth then golde. In the waye of righteousness there is life, as for any other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The XIII. Chapter.

A Wyse sonne wyll receaue his fathers warnyng, but he that is scornfull, wyll not heare when he is reprovèd. A good man shal enioye the frute of his mouth, but he that hath a frowarde mynde, shalbe spoyled. He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life: but who so speaketh vnaduyse, synneth harme. The slogarde wolde sayne haue, and can not get his desyre: but the soule of the diligent shal haue plenty. A righteous man abhouerh lyes, but the vngodly shameth both other and himself. Righteousnesse keepeth the innocēt in the waye, but vngodlynesse shal enerthrowne the synner.

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge: agayne, some men are poore hauyng great riches. With goodes every man deluynerh his life, and the poore wil not be reprovèd. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull, but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge these that do all thinges with aduysement, there is wysdome. Hastely gotten goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe carienge for a thinge that is dysferred, greueth the herte: but when the desyre cometh, it is a tre of life. Who so despyseth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the commandement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstondinge geueth fauoure, but harbe is the waye of the despyfers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his folly. A vngodly messenger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitore is wholsome. He that thinketh scorne to be reformed, cometh to pouerte and shame: but who so receaucth correccion, shal come to honoure. When a desyre is brought to passe, it deluyteth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschueth enell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a cōpanyō of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschese foloweth vpon synners, but the rightuous shal haue a good reward. Which their childers childre shal haue in possessiō, for the riches of the synner is layed vp for y iust. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the felde of the poore, ⁊ shalbe increased out of measure. He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, holdeh him euer in nurtoure. The rightuous eateth, and is satisfied, but y bely of the vngodly hath neuer ynough.

The XIII. Chapter.

Wyse womā vpholdeh hir house, but a foolish wise plucketh it downe.

Who so feareth the LORDE, walketh in the right path: ⁊ regardeth not him that abhoureth the wayes of the LORDE. In the mouth of the foolish is the boostinge of lordshipe, but y lippes of y wyse wilbe warre of soch. Where no oxen are, there the crybb is eniptie: but where the oxen laboure, there is moch frute. A faithfull wytnesse wyl not dyssemble, but a false recorde wil make a lye.

A scoinefull body seteth wysdome, ⁊ synbeth it not: but knowlege is easy to come by, vnto him that wil vnderstonde. Se y thou medle not with a foole, ⁊ do as though thou haddest no knowlege. The wysdome of him that hath vnderstondinge is, to take he de vnto his waye, but the foolishnesse of the unwyse disceaueth. Fooles make but a spor te of synne, but there is fauourable lone and ge the rightuous. The herte of him that hath vnderstondinge wil nether dispare for eny sorow, ner beto presumptuous for eny so dane ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe overthrown, but the tabernacles of y rightens shal flouthe. There is a waye, which some menthinke to be right, but the ende thereof lebeth vnto death. The herte is soroufull euen in laughter, and the ende of myrth is he ynnesse. An vn faithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl bewarre of soch. An ignorant body belueth all thinges, but who so hath vnderstondinge, lokech well to his goinges. A wyse man, feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpacient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

The ignorant haue foolishnes in possessiō, but the wyse are crowned with knowlege.

The euell shal bowe them selues before y

good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the dores of the rightuous. The poore is hated euen of his owne neighbours, but the riche hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neghbo, doth amysse: but blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that ymagin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpo good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulness. Diligēt labo bryngeth riches, but where many vaync wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignorance of fooles is very foolishnesse. A faithfull wytnesse deliuereth soules, but a lyar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto his he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the snares of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the confusiō of the prync. Pacience is a token of wisdom, but wiath and haustie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A mery herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth awaye the bones. He that doth a poore man wroge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is a frayed of every parcell, but the rightuous hath a good hope eue in death. Wysdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderstondinge, and he wyl teach them that are vnlearned. Rightuousnes setteth vp the people, but wickednesse bryngeth folke to destruccion. A discrete seruaunt is a pleasure vnto y kyng, but one y is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wiath.

The XV. Chapter.

Softe aswere putteth downe displeasure, but frowarde wordes prouoke vnto anger. A wyse tonge commendeth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in every place, both vpon y good and badd. A wholsome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a broken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he y taketh hede whan he is reponed, shal haue y more vnderstōdinge.

In the house of the rightuous are grea te riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysordie. A wyse mouth poureth out knowlege, but y herte of the foolish doth not so. The LORDE abhorreth y sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the rightuous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominaciō vn

The LORDE wyl breake downe y^e house of y^e proude, but he shal make fast y^e borders of y^e wyddowe. The LORDE abhorreth y^e ymaginacions of y^e wicked, but pure wordes are pleasaunt vnto him. The couetous man teth rewardes, shal lye. A righteous mā museth in his mynde how to do good, but y^e mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth y^e prayer of the righteous. Like as y^e clearnesse of y^e eyes reioyseth y^e herte, so doth a good name fede

y^e bones. The eare y^e harkeneth vnto whol-

Salomons Proverbes

A frowarde body canserth strife, and he þ is a blabbe of his tonge, maketh deuyſien amonge prynces. A wicked mā begyleth his neghbō, ⁊ ledeth him þ waye þ is not good.

He that wyncfeth w his eyes, ymagineth myschefe: and he þ byteth his lippes, wyl do some harme. Age is a crowne of worſhipe, yf it be founde in the waye of righteouſnes.

A pacient man is better then one that is ſtrōge: and he that can rule him ſelfe, is more worth then he þ wynneth a cite. The lottes are caſt in to the lappe, but their fall ſtōdeth in the LORDE.

The XVII. Chapter.

Wetter is a drye morſell w quyetneſſe, the a full houſe and many fatt catell w ſtryfe. A diſcrete ſeruañt ſhal haue more rule then the ſonnes þ haue no wyſdome, and ſhal haue like heretage w the brethren. Like as ſyluer is tried in the fyre and golde in the fornace, enen ſo doth the LORDE proue the hertes. A wicked body holdeth moch of false lippes, ⁊ a dyſſemblynge perſonne geuerth eare to a diſceatfull tōge. Who ſo laugheth þ poore to ſceme, blaſphemeth his maker: and he þ is glad of another mans hurte, ſhal not be unpunyſhed. Childers children are a worſhipe vnto the elders, and the fathers are the honō of the children. An eloquent ſpeech becometh net a ſcole, a dyſſimblinge mouth alſo beſimeth net a prynce.

Liberalite is a precious ſtone vnto him that ha: h it, for where ſo euer he becometh, he proſpereth. Who ſo couereth another mans offence, ſeketh loue: but he þ diſcloſeth the ſaure, ſetteth frendes at variaunce. One reproſe only doth more good to him þ hath vnderſtōdinge, then an C. ſtripes vnto a ſcole. A ſedicious perſonne ſeketh myschefe, but a cruell meſſaunger ſhal be ſent agaynſt him. It were better to come agaynſt a ſhe Were robbed of hir whelpes, then agaynſt a ſcole in his fooliſhnes. Who ſo rewardeth euell for good, the plague ſhal not departe frō his houſe. He þ ſoweth diſcorde ⁊ ſtriſe, is like ene þ dyggeth vp a water breke: but an open enemy is like the water þ breaketh out ⁊ renerth abroad. The LORDE hateth as well him þ iuſtifieth þ vngodly, as him þ condempneth the innocēt. What helpeth it to geue a ſcole money in his hōde, where as he hath no mynde to bye wyſdome? He is a frend that all waye loneth, and in adueſite a man ſhal knowe who is his brother. Who ſo promiſeth by the hande, ⁊ is ſuertie for another, he is a ſcole. He þ leueth ſtriſe, delyteth in ſynne: ⁊ who ſo ſetteth his dore to bye, ſeketh after a fall. Who ſo hath a frowarde herte, opteyneth no good: and he þ hath an ouerthwarre tonge, ſhal fall in to myschefe. An vnwyſe body byngeth himſelfe in to ſorowe, and þ father of a ſcole can haue no ioye. A mery herte maketh a luſty age, but a ſorowfull mēde dryeth vp þ bones. The vngodly taketh giſtes out of the beſeme, to waſt the wayes of iudgment. Wyſdome ſhyneth in þ face of him þ hath vnderſtōdinge, but þ eyes of ſcoles wandrethorew out all lōdes. An vn diſcrete ſonne is a greſe vnto his father, and heuynſſe vnto his mother þ bare him. To punyſh þ innocent, and to ſmyte þ prynces þ geue true iudgmēt, are both euell. He is wyſe and diſcrete, þ tempereth his wordes: and he is a mā of vnderſtōdinge, þ maketh moch of his ſpice. See a very ſcole (when he holdeth his tonge) is counted wyſe, and to haue vnderſtōdinge, when he ſhutteth his lippes.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Who ſo hath pleaſure to ſowe diſcorde, picketh a quarell in euery thinge. A ſcole hath no delyte in vnderſtōdinge, but only in thoſe thinges wherein his herte reioyſeth. Where vngodlynes is, there is alſo diſdayne: ⁊ ſo there ſcloweth ſhame ⁊ d. ſhenō. The wordes of a mā's mouth are like depe waters, and the well of wyſdome is like a full ſtreame. It is not good to regarde þ perſonne of the vngodly, ⁊ to put backe þ righteous in iudgmēt. A ſcoles lippes are euer brawlinge, and his mouth produceth vnto batayll. A ſcoles mouth is his owne deſtruction, and his lippes are þ ſnare for his owne ſoule. The wordes of a ſlanderer are very woundes, and go thorow vnto the ynnereſt partes of the body. Who ſo is ſleuthfull and ſlacke in his labō, is þ brother of him þ is a waſter. The name of þ LORDE is a ſtronge caſtell, þ righteous flyeth vnto it, and ſhal be ſaued. But þ rich mā's geedes are his ſtrengthe helde, yee he taketh them for an hye wall rōnde aboute him. After pryde cometh deſtruction, and honō after ſclownes. He that geuerth ſentēce in a matter before he heare it, is a ſcole, and worthy to be cenſured. A good ſtomacke dryueth awaye a mā's diſeaſe, but whā þ ſpice is vexed, he maye abyde it? A wyſe herte laboureth for knowlege, and a prudent eare ſeketh vnderſtōdinge. Liberalite byngeth a man to honō and worſhipe, ⁊ ſetteth him amonge great men.

The righteous accuſeth hi ſelfe firſt of all, yf his neghbō ceme, he ſhal ſynde him. The lot paciſieth þ variaunce, ⁊ parteth þ mightie aſunder. The vnite of brethren is ſtronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely shalbe satissfied with the frute of his owne mouth, and with the increase of his lippes shal he be fylled. Death and life stonde in the power of the tonge, he that loveth it, shal enjoye the frute therof. Who so syndeth a wife syndeth a good thynge, & receiveth an wholsome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh supplicacion and prayeth mekely, but the riche geueth a rough answer.

A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frēdshipe, and sticketh faster vnto him then a brother.

The XIX. Chapter.

Better is the poore that lyeth godly, then the blasphemour that is but a foole. Where no discrecion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swifte on fote, stumblith hastely. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, & then is his herte impatient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsake of his owne frendes. A false wytnesse shal not remayne unpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude hāgeth vpo greate men, & euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his brethermen: yee his owne frendes forsake him, & he that geueth credēce vnto wordes, getteth nothing. He that is wyse, loveth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstandinge, shal prosper. A false wytnesse shal not remayne unpunished, & he that speaketh lyes shal perishe. Delicate ease becometh not a foole, much more vnseemly is it, a bonde man to haue rule of prynces. A wyse man putteth of displeasure, & it is his hono to let some fautes passe.

The kynges disfaue is like the roaringe of a lyon, but his frēdshipe is like the dewe vpo the graspe. An vndiscrete sonne is like the heuynes of his father, & a brawlynge wife is like the copp of an house, where thorow it is euer droppynge. House & riches maye a mā haue by the heretage of his elders, but a discrete woman is the gifte of the LORDE. Slouthfulnes bryngeth slepe, & an ydell soule shal suffer longer. Who so kepeth the comaundemēt, kepeth his owne soule: but he that regardeth not his waye, shal dye. He that hath pitie vpon the poore, ledeeth vnto the LORDE: & loke what he layeth out, it shalbe payed him agayne. Chastē & some whyle there is hope, but let not the soule be moued to slaye hi. For greate wrath bryngeth harme, therfore let him go, and so mayest thou teach him more nuture. O

gene care vnto good counsell, & be content to be reformed, that thou mayest bewyse hereafter. There are many deuices in a māns herte, neuertheles the counsell of the LORDE shal stonde. It is a mans worshippe to do good, & better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyssembler.

The feare of the LORDE preserueth the life, yee it geueth plētousnes, without the visita- cō of any plague. A slouthfull body shureth his honde in to his bosome, so yhe can not put it to his mouth. If thou syncest a scorneful personne, the ignorant shal take better hede: & yf thou reprovest one y' hath vnderstandinge, he wil be thy wyse. He that hurteth his father or shureth out his mother, is a shamefull & an vnworthy sonne. My sonne, heare nomore the doctrine y' leadech the awaye from the wordes of vnderstandinge.

A false wytnesse laugheth iudgmēt to scorn, & the mouth of the vngodly eateth vp wickednes. Punyshmentes are ordered for the scornefull, and stripes for fooles backes.

The XX. Chapter.

Wine is a voluptuous thinge, & dred- dennes causeth sedicion: who so delyteth therein, shal neuer be wyse.

The kyng ought to be feared as the roaringe of a lyon, who so prouoketh him vnto anger, offendeth agaynst his owne soule. It is a mans honoure to kepe himself from strife, but they y' haue pleasure in brawlinge, are fooles eueryone. A slouthfull body wyl not go to plowe for colde, therfore shal he go a begginge in Sommer, and haue nothinge. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstandinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithfull mā? Who so ledech a godly and an innocent life, happie shal his children be, whom he lea- ueth behynde him.

A kyng that sitteth in iudgment, and lo- keth well aboute him, dryueth awaye all euell. Who can saye: my hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abhominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conuersacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare & the sight of the eye, the LORDE hath made the both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto povertie: but open thine eyes, & thou shalt haue bryd ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) when they haue it, but when it is gone, they gene it a good worde.

Thow counsell the thinges that men deuise go forwarder: & with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Medle not with him that bewrayeth secrettes, and is a flaunderer, and disceaueth with his lippes.
Who so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of darck nesse. The heretage that cometh to haif-tely at the first, shal not be praysed at the en-
de. Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put y trust in the LORDE, & he shal defende y. The LORDE abhorreth two maner of weightes, and a false balafice is an euell thinge. The LORDE ordreth euery mā goinges, for what is he, that vnderstondeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blaspheme that which is holy, & then to go aboute w vovues. A wyse kynge destro-yeth y vngodly, & bryngeth the whele ouer them. The lanterne of y LORDE is y birch of man, & goeth thorow all the inwarde par-tes of the body. Mercy & faithfulness preserue the kynge, & with louynge kyndnes his seate is holden vp. The strength of yonge men is their worshipe, & a gray heade, is an honour vnto y aged. Woundes dryue awaye euell, and so do stripes the inwarde partes of the body. The XXI. Chapter.

The kynge hert is in the hande of the LORDE, like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whither so euer
he wyll. Every man thinketh his owne wa-ye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth y her-reo. To do rightuousnesse and iudgmēt is more acceptable to the LORDE the sacrifice.

A presumptuous lōke, a proude stemacke, & the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuyses of one that is diligent, brynge plen-teousnes: but he y is vnaduyfed, commeth vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches w y disceatfulness of his tonge, he is a foole, &
like vnto them that set their owne death.

The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruccion, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the frowarde are straunge, but y workes of him
y is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder y house toppe, then with a braulinge woman in a wyde house.

The soule of the vngodly wyssheth euell,

and hath no pitie vpon his negheure.

When the scornefull is punyshed, the ignorant take y better hede: & when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vn-derstondinge. The rightuous enfourmeth
the house of the vngodly, but y vngodly go on still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the criēge of the poore, he shal crie himself and not be herde. A preuy rewarde pacieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stilleth furiousnesse.

The iust delyteth in doynge the thyng
that is right, but the workers of wickednesse abhore the same. The man that wandreth out of the waye of wysdome, shal remayne in the cōgregacion of y deed. He y hath pleasure in banquettes, shal be a poore man:
Who so delyteth in wyne and delicacies, shal
not be riche. The vngodly shalbe geuen for the rightuous, & the wicked for the iust.

It is better to dwell in a wyldernes, the with a chydinge and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is greate treasure and plenteousnesse, but a foolish body spendeth vp all. Who so foloweth righteous-nesse and mercy, syndeth both life, righteou-nesse and hono. A wyse man wynereth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength y they trust in, he bryngeth it downe. Who so kepeth his mouth and his tonge, the same kepeth his soule from troubles. He y is prou-de & presumptuous, is called a scornefull mā,
which in wiath darre worke maliciously.

The voluptuousnesse of the slouthfull is his owne death, for his hādes wyll not labo.

He coueteth and desyeth all the daye lon-ge, but the rightuous is allwaye genynge & kepeth no thinge backe. The sacrifice of the vngodly is abhominacion, for they offre
the thinge y is gotten w wickednes. A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he y wilbe content to heare, shal allwaye haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth rashly, but the iust reformeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, there is no vnder-stondinge, there is no counsell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst y daye of battayll, but the L O R D E geueth
the victory.

Handle thy matter w thy neghbō himself, and discover not another mans secrete: lest when men heare thereof, it turne to thy dishonō, and lest thine euell name do not ceasse. thy neighbours house, lest he be weary of the, and so abhore the. Who so beareth false wytnesse agaynst his neighbour, he is a very speare, a swearde & a sharpe arrowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of neede, is like a rotten toth and a slippery foote. Who so syngeth a songe to a wicked herte, clothech hi with ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chaffe. If thine enemye hunger, feed him: yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpon his heade, and the LORDE shal reward the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenance a backbytters tonge. It is better to sit in a corner vnder the rose, then to be a brawlyng woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a springe & is destroyed. Like as it is not good to eat to moch hony, euen so he that wyll search out hys thynges, it shal be to heuy for him. He that can not rule himself, is like a cite, which is broken downe, and hath no walles.

The XXVI. Chapter.

Like as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in haruest: euen so is worshippe vnseemly for a foole. Like as & byrde and the swalowe take their flight and fle here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not light vpon a man. Vnto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a brydle, and a rodde to the foolles backe. Geue not the foole an answer after his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make & foole an answer to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne conceite. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that comitteth eny thynge to a foole. Like as it is an vnseemly thynge to haue legges & yet to halte, eue so is a parable in & foolles mouth.

He & setteth a foole in hys dignite, & is eue as yf a man byd cast a precious stone vpon & galous. A parable in a foolles mouth, is like a thorne & pricketh a droncken man in & hande. A man of experience discerneth all thynges well, but who so hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne a fresh. If thou seyst a man & is wyse in his owne conceite, there is more hope in a foole then in hi. The slouthfull sayeth: there is a leoparde in & waye, and a lyon in & myddest of the stretes. Like as the doxe turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedd. The slouthfull body thrusteth his hode in to his bosome, and it greuethe him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh himself wyser, then vij. menthat sytt and reach.

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one & taketh a dogg by & eares. Like as one shutech deadly arrowes and dartes out of a pueny place, euen so doth a dyssembler with his neighbour, And then sayeth he: I dyd it but in spoite. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out: and where the bachbyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd & fyre: euen so doth a brawlinge felowe stire vpon variaunce. A slanderers wordes are like flattery, but they pearse & inwarde partes of & body. Vnymons lippes & a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered wth syluer dross. An enemye dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ymagineth myschefe: but whā he speaketh fayre, belene him not, for there are seuen abhominacions in his herte. Who so keepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malice shal be shewed before the whole congregacion. Who so dyggeth vpon a pytt, shal fall therin: and he & wel-treth a stone, shal stembles vpon it hymselfe.

The XXVII. Chapter.

Nake not thy boost of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another man praysethe, & not thine owne mouth: yee other folkes lippes, and not thine. The stone is heuy, and the sende weightie: but a foolles wrath is heuyer then they both. Wrath is a cruell thynge, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde enuye? An open rebuke is better, then a secrete lone. Faithfull are the woundes of a lover, but & kysse of an enemye are disceatfull. He that is full, abhonerth an hony cembe: but vnto him that is hongrie, every sower thynge is sweete. He that oft tymes flyteth, is like a byrde & forsaketh hir nest. The herte is glad of a sweete oyntment and sauoure, but a frowmace that can geue good counsell, reioysseth a mans neighbour. Thine owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble.

The xxviiij. Chap.

Better is a frende at hōde, then a brother farre of. My sonne, be wyse, and thou shalt make me a glad herte: so that I shal make an swere vnto my rebuters. A wyse man seynge the plage wyl hyde him self, as for fooles they go on still, and suffer harme. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger, & take a pledge of him for the vntowenmans sake. He that is to hastie to praise his neyghboure aboue measure, shalbe taken as one y geueth him an euell reporte. A brawlynge woman and the rose of the house droppynge in a raynie daye, maye well be compared together. He that refrayneth her, refrayneth the wynde, and holdeth oyle fast in his hōde. Like as one yrd whetteth another, so doth one man comforte another. Who so kepeth his fyge tre, shal enioye the frutes therof: he that wayteth vpon his master, shal come to honoure. Like as in eue water there appeare dyuerse faces, enē so dyuerse men haue dyuerse hertes. Like as hell & destruction are neuer full, enen so the eyes of mē can neuer be satisfied. Syluer is tryed in the moulde, & golde in the fornace, & so is a man, whan he is openly praysed to his face. Though thou shuldest bray a foole w a pestell in a mortar like otemell, yet wil not his foolishnesse go from him. Se y thou knowe the nombre of thy cattell thy self, and loke well to thy flockes. For riches abyde not allwaye, & the crowne endureth not for ener. The hay groweth, y grasse cōmūth vp, & herbes are gathered in y mountaines. The lambes shal clothe the, & for the goates thou shalt haue money to y husbondry. Thou shalt haue geates mylke ynough to fede the, to upholde thy husholde, & to susteyne thy maydens.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

The vngodly flyeth no man chasyngge him, but the rightuous stendeth st. ff as a lyon. Because of synne y len de doth oft change hir prynce: but the rowmen of vnderstondinge & wyssdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynnall rayne that destroyeth y frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse y vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. Wicked men discerne not the thinge y is right, but they that seeke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. A poore man ledynge a godly life, is better then the rich that goeth in forward wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstondinge: but he y fedeth ryorous men, shamieth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vantage & wynnynge, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. He that turneth awaye his eare from hearinge y lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so ledeth y rightuous in to an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pytt, but y inst shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstondinge, cā perceaue him wel ynough. When rightuous men are in prosperite, the doth honoure floushy: but when the vngedly come vp, y state of men changeth. He that hydeh his synnes, shal not prospere: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shal haue mercy. Well is him that stōdeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischese. Like as a rearinge lyon and an hongrie beer, euen so is an vngodly prynce ouer the poore peepie.

Where the prynce is without vnderstondinge, there is greate oppressien & wronge: but yf he be soch one as hateth couetousnesse, he shal longe raigne. He that by violence sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagate vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to succ him. Who so leadeh a godly and an innocēt life, shal be safe: but he that geeth forward wayes, shal once haue a fall. He y tylleth his londe, shal haue plenty of bryd: but he that foloweth ydillnesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faithfull man is ready to be cōmūded, but he that maketh to much haist for to be riche, shal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of personnes in iudgment is net good: And why? he will do wronge, yeeuen for a pece of bryd. He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shal come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shal fynde more fauoure at y last, the he that flattereth him. Who so robberh his father and mother, and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a murtherer.

He that is of a proude stemacke, stereth vp strife: but he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. He that geneth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth awaye his eyes from sech as be in neede, shal suffre greate pouerte himself.

Whan the vngodly are come vp, men are sayne to hyde them selues: but whē they perissh, the rightuous increase.

The xxx. Chap. 30. xlii.

21 What is stiffnecked & wyll not be reformed, shal suddenly be destroyed wth out eny helpe. Where y^e righteous haue the over hande, y^e people are in prosperite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, there y^e people mourne. Who so loveth wysdome, maketh his father a glad man: but he y^e keepeth harlottes, spendeth awaye y^e he hath. With true iudgment y^e kynge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man y^e taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flattereth his neghb^{rs}, layeth a nette for his fere. The synne of y^e wicked is his owne snare, but y^e righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considereth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderston- dyng. Wicked people brynge a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. If a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The blouderhyfrie hate the righteous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his spere altogether, but a wyse man keepeth it in till afterwarde.

22 If a prynce delyce in lyes, all his seruantes are vngodly. The poore and the tender meete together, the L O R D E lighteneth both their eyes. The seate of the kynge y^e faithfully iudgeth the poore, shal continue sure for euermore. The rodde and correction mynistrer wysdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, he bryngeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the righteous shal se their fall. Tortoure thy sonne with correction, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert. Where no prophet is, there the people perishe: but well is hym that keepeth the lawe. A seruante wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstande, yet wil he not regarde them.

23 If thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnadvised, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryngeth vp his seruante from a childe, shal make him his master at length. An angrie man stereth vp strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. After pryde commeth a fall, but a lowly spere bryngeth greace worshippe. Who so keepeth company wth a thefe, hateth his owne soule: he heareth blasphemies, & telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, shal come to hono^r. Many there be that seke y^e prynces fauoure, but every mans iudgment commeth from the LORDE.

The righteous abhoire the vngodly: but as for those that be in y^e right waye, y^e wicked hate them.

The XXX Chapter.

The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake.

In the prophetic of a true faithfull man, whom God hath helped, whom God hath comforted & nourished. For though I am y^e leest of all, & haue no mas vnderstodige (for I neuer lerned wysdome) yet haue I vnderstodige & am wel ensewmed in godly thinges. Who hath clymmed vp iⁿ to heauen? Who hath come downe from thence? Who hath holden y^e wynde fast in his hande? Who hath coprehended y^e waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of y^e worlde? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? All the wordes of God are pure & cleane, for he is a shyld vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therfore vnto his wordes, lest he reprove the, and thou be founde as a liar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remoue from me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouerte nor riches, only graunte me a necessary lyuynge. Lest yf I be to full, I denye y^e, & saye: what felowe is y^e LORDE? And lest I beinge constrained thow pouerte, fall vnto stealinge, and forsweare the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruante vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and then be hurte. He that bryngeth vp an euell reporte vps the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clensed from their fylthy- nesse. There are people y^e haue a preuilege, and cast vp their eye lyddes. This peoples tethe are siverdes, and with their chaste bones they consume and deuoure the syniple of the earth, and the poore frem amonge me.

This generacion (which is like an hois- leche) hath two daughters: y^e one is called, fetch hither: the other, brynge hither.

There be thre thinges that are neuer satisfied, and the fourth saith neuer hoo. The hell, a womans wombe, and the earth hath neuer water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. Who so laugheth his father to scoone, and setteth his mothers command- dement at naught: the rauens pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yongle Aegles.

There be thre thinges to hye for me, and as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

The waye of an Aegle in þ̄ ayre, þ̄ waye of a serpent ouer þ̄ stone, þ̄ waye of a shippe in þ̄ see, & þ̄ waye of a mā w̄ a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyse þ̄ breaketh wedlocke, which wyperh hir month like as whā she hath eatē, & sayeth: As for me, I haue doneno harme. Thowthie thinges the earth is disquieted, & the fourth maye it not beare: Thow a seruaūt þ̄ beareth rule, thow a foole þ̄ hath greute riches, thow an ydle honswife, & thow an handmayden þ̄ is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thinges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wysdome they excede the wyse. The Emmettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in þ̄ harvest.

The conyes are but a fible folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet get they forth together by heapes. The spyder labourerh w̄ hir hādes, & þ̄ in þ̄ kynges palace.

There be thie thinges þ̄ go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the goodliest of all. A Lyon which is kyng of bestes, & geterh place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kyng þ̄ goerh forth w̄ his peop'le.

If thou be so foolish to magnifie þ̄ self, or medlest w̄ eny soch thinge, the laye thine hāde vpon þ̄ mouth. Who so chymeth mylke, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wiath, bryngeth forth strife.

The XXXI. Chapter.

A These are the wordes of Kyng Lamuel, & þ̄ lesson þ̄ his mother taught him. My sonne, thou sonne of my body: O my deare beloned sonne, geue not ouer thy substance & mynde vnto women, which are the destrucciō enē of kynges. O Lamuel, geue kynges no wyne, geue kynges & prynces no stronge drynke: lest they beinge dronken forget the lawe, & regarde not þ̄ cause of the poore, & of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, & wyne vnto those þ̄ mourne: that they maye drynke it, & forget their misery & aduersite. Be thou an aduocate & stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme & sicourles. With þ̄ mouth defende þ̄ thinge þ̄ is lawfull and right, and þ̄ cause of þ̄ poore and helplesse.

mā, she is moch more worth the perles. The herte of hir husbāde maye safely trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles.

She wil do him good & not enel all þ̄ dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll & flax, & labourerh gladly w̄ hir handes. She is likē a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in þ̄ might season, to prouyde meate for hir hōsholde, & foode for hir maydens. She considreth lōde, & byerh it, and w̄ the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrderh hir loynes with strength, and couragerh hir armes. And yf she perceave that hir hōshwifrie doth good, hir candle goerh not out by night. She layerh hir fyngers to the spyndle, & hir hande taketh holde of þ̄ rocke.

She openeth hir hande to þ̄ poore, yee she stretcherh forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not þ̄ the colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir hōsholde folkes are duble clothed. She maketh hir self sayre ornamētes, hir clothinge is whyte sylke & purple. Hir husbāde is moch set by in þ̄ gates, wh̄ he syereth amonge þ̄ rulers of þ̄ londe. E. he maketh cloth of sylke & selleth it, and deliuereth a gyrdle vnto þ̄ marchaūt.

Stregh and honoure is hir clothinge, & in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wysdome, & in hir tōge is the lawe of grace. She loferh wel to the wayes of hir hōsholde, & eateth not hir bried with ydilnes. Hir children arise & call hir blessed, & hir husbāde maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be þ̄ gather riches together, but thou goest aboue the all.

As for faub, it is disceatfull, and beutic is a vaynethinge: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayfed. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne woikes prayse her in the gates.

What this booke conteyneth.

- Chap. I. All thinges (yf a mā wyl cōsidre them wel) are but vanite. Neuertheles amōge them all there is nothige weaker and more vnsusteyned, then man him self.
- Chap. II. In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mētion of the wordes and cōuersaciō of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the onely everlastinge God.
- Chap. III. Every thinge hath a tyme. There is no thige, but God hath putted by ournesse and trauayle in it, to exercise men withall. What so euer a man enioyeth of his laboure, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.
- Chap. IIII. A cōsideraciō of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the duty and office whereunto it is ordered, it shalbe brought lowe.
- Chap. V. Agaynst foolish and remerarious vowes. Let no man inuayle that so much euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the riche and agaynst riches.
- Chap. VI. Agaynst those rich men that dare not enioye their riches: how mad and foolish they be.
- Chap. VII. No man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thige it is to haue a good name. The profite of wysdome.
- Chap. VIII. Of the obedience which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despised. It is not possible for any mā, to cōprehende the wordes that be in the worlde.
- Chap. IX. Like thinges happen vnto all men: therfore with myrth and thankfulness shulde men enioye the giftes of God. Wysdome passeth all thinges.
- Chap. X. XI In these two chapters are many wysse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of euery man.
- Chap. XII. In this chapter the preacher sheweth his whole meanninge, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the concludiō, that there is nothinge stedfast and durable but God himself, whō men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes even from their yowth vp.

The first. Chap. Ho. xlvij.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the preacher, the sonne of David, kynge of Ierusalem.

Alis but vanite (saith the preacher) all is but playne vanite. For what els hath a mā, of all the labōr he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another cometh, but the earth abydeth still. The Sonne ariseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, & he maye there rise vp agayne. The wynde goeth to ward & South, & fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himselfe agayne. All floudes runne vnto the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harbe, & no mā can expresse them. The eye is not satisfied wth sight, the eare is not fylled wth hearinge. The thinge that hath bene, cometh to passe agayne: & the thinge that hath bene done, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoe in the tymes that haue bene before vs. The thinge that is past, is out of remēbraunce: Eue so the thinges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpon amōge the that come after. I myselfe preacher, beinge kynge of Israel & Ierusalem, applyed my mynde to seeke out & search for the knowlege of all thinges that are done vnder heauen. Soch trauayle & labōr hath God geue vnto the childre of mē, to exercise the selues therin. Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sonne, & lo, they are all but vanite & vexaciō of mynde. The crooked can not be mayde straight, & the fautes cā not be nōbred. I cōmoned wth myne owne herte, sayēge: lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wysdome, than all they that haue bene before me in Ierusalem. Yee my hert had greate experieñce of wysdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: yf I might knowe what were wysdome & vnderstōdinge, what were erōr & foolishnes. And I perceaued yf this also was but a vexaciō of mynde: for where much wysdome is, there is also greate trauayle & disquietnes: & yf more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The II. Chapter.

As I sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so much that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?

Ecclesiastes

The iij. Chap.

So I thought in my herte, to withdraue my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wysdome, and to comprēde foolishnes vntill the tyme that (amonge all þe thinges which are vnder þe Sonne) I might se what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

I made gorgeous sayre workes, I buylde me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me orchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. I made poles of water, to water þe grene and frutesfull trees withall. I bought sirnautes and maydēs, and had a greate housholde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substaunce of them, then all they þe were before me in Jerusalem. I gathered syluer & golde together, even a treasure of kynges & lordes.

I prouided me syngers and remē which coude playe of instrumentes, to make men myrth and pastime. I gat me drynke yuge cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater & in more worshippe, then all my predecessours in Jerusalem. For wysdome remaine with me: & loke what so ever myne eyes desyred, I let them haue it: & wherein so euer my herte delyted or had eny pleasure, I withheld it not fro it. Thus my herte reioysed in all þe I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauaile, But when I considered all the workes þe my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therein: lo, all was but vanite and veracion of mynde, & nothinge of eny value vnder þe Sonne. Then turned I me to considere wysdome, erroure and foolishnesse (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me þe kyng in soch workes?) and I sawe, that wysdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole geeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

Then thought I in my mynde: If it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what needeth me then to laboure eny more for wysdome? So I confessed within my harte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as þe foole. Thus begane I to be weery of my life, in so much that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite & veracion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my laboure, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be sayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, whether he shalbe a wysemā or a foole? And yet shal he be lord of all my labours, which I with soch wysdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all soch trauaile, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for so much as a man shulde weery him self with wysdome, with vnderstandinge and opportunitie, and yet be sayne to leaue his labours vnto another, þe neuer sweet for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a mā of all þe labo & trauaile of his mynde, þe he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heuynesse, sorowe & disquietnes all þe dayes of his life? In so much that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his soule to be mery in his labour? Yee I sawe that this also was a giste of God: For who maye eate, drynke, or drynke eny thigge to passe without him? And why? he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaseth him: whether it be wysdome, vnderstandinge, or gladnesse. But vnto the synner he geueth weerynes and sorow, that he maye gather and heape together þe thinge, þe a fterward shalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaseth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very disquietnesse and veracion of mynde.

The III. Chapter.

Very thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath his conuenient season. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. There is a tyme to plante, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, þe is planted: A tyme to slaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to danse: A tyme to cast awaye stenes, and a tyme to gather stenes together: A tyme to embrace, & a tyme to refrayne from embracing: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to lese: A tyme to spare, and a tyme to spende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to sowe together: A tyme to kepe sylence, and a tyme to speake: A tyme to loue, & a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that both eny thinge) but weerynesse and labour? For as touching the trauaile and carefulnesse which God hath geuen vnto mā, I se that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All this hath he ordered maruelous goodly, to euery thinge his due tyme. He hath plated igno-raunce also in the hertes of men, & they shul-de not fynde out & grounde of his workes,

which he doth from & beginninge to & ende. So I perceaued, & in these thinges there is nothinge better for a man, the to be me-ry & to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all & a man eateth & drynketh, yee what soeuer a mā enioyeth of all his labo, & same is a gift of God. I considered also & what soeuer God doth, it cōtinueth for ever, & & no thinge can be put vnto it ner takē from it: & & God doth it to & intent, & men shulde feare him. The thinge & hath bene, is now: & the thinge & is for to come, hath bene aforetyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Moreover, I sawe vnder & Somme, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, & iniquite in steade of righteuousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the righteous from the vngodly, &
then shal be the tyme & iudgment of all coun-cels & workes. I cōmoned to myne owne herte also cōcernynge the childe of men:
how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth
the apere, as though they were bestes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beas-tes, & as the one dyeth, so dyeth & other: yee they haue both one maner of breth, so & (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust agayne.

Who knoweth the spere of man & goeth
upwarde, and the breth of the beest & goeth downe into the earth? Wherfore I perceaued, & there is nothyinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his porcion. But who wil brynge him to se the thinge, that shal come after him?

The III. Chapter.

SO I turned me, and considered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the tea-res of such as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde deli-uer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherfore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnbome to be better at ease the they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all travayle and diligence of labour was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thin-ge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole soldeth his handes together, & eateth vp his o-wne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better to rest, the both & handes full with labor and travayle. Moreover, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe ner brother:

yet is there no ende of his carefull travay-
le, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, & saye:)
For whom do I take soch travayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume awaye my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therefore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their laboure. If one of them fall, his companyon helpeth him vp agayne: But wo is him that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouer-come, but two maye make resistauce: A threfolde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kin-ge, that doteth, and can not bewarte in tyme to come. Some one cometh out of prison, & is made a kynge: & another which is borne in the kyngdome, cometh vnto pouerce. And I perceaued, & all men lyuynge vnder the Sonne, go to the seconde childe, that cometh vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thorow him. This is also a vayne thin-ge and a vexacion of mynde. Whan thou comest in to the house of God, kepe thy so-te, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare:
that is better then the offeringes of fooles,
for they knowe not what euell they do.

The V. Chapter.

USE not hastie with thy mouth, & let not thine herte speake eny thig rashly before God. For God is in heauen, & thou vpon earth, therefore let thy wor-des be fewe. For wheremuch carefulnesse is, there are many dreames: & wheremany wor-des are, there men maye heare fooles. If thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to perfourme it. As for foolish vovwes, he hath no pleasure in them. If thou promyse eny thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shouldest promise, and not paye. Use not thy mouth to cause y flesh for to synne, y thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in & fault.

Ecclesiastes

The vij. Chap.

For the God wil be angrie at thy voyce, and destroye all thy workes of thine handes.

Eccle. 4. 2

And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: but loke thou feare God. If thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongously dealt withall, so thou equite & the right of the lawe is waisted in the londe: marreth not thou at soch iudgment, for one great man kepeth touch with another, and they might helpe the selues together. The whole londe also with the felde and all that is therein, is in subieccion and bondage vnto thy Kinge.

B

Her that loveth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so deliuereth in riches, shal haue no profite thereof. Is not this also a wayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouring man slepeth sweetly, whether it be little or moch that he eateth: but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffice him to slepe.

Iob 20. 6

Yet is there a sore plage, which I haue seene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him that hath them in possession.

Iob 1. 6

For oft times they perishe with his great misery and trouble: and yf he haue a childe, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carrieth nothinge awaye with him of all his labour. This is a miserabie plage, that he shal go awaye even as he came. What helpeth it him then, that he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greates care fulnesse, sicknesse & sorow.

Eccle. 1. 2

Therefore me thinke it a better and a sayer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his labour, that he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God giveth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his labour: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The VI. Chapter.

Here is yet a plage vnder thy Sonne, & it is a generail thinge amonge men: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honoure, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desyre: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spendeth them. This is a wayne thinge & a miserable plage. If a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in nombre, and yet cannot enioye his good, nether be buried: as for him I saye, that an vntimely byrth is better then he. For he cometh to naught, & goeth his waye in to darcknes, and his name is forgotten. Moreover, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of no rest nether here ner there: Yee though he lyued two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the labour that a man taketh, is for himself, and yet his desyre is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the feole? What helpeth it the poore, that he tyneth to walke before the lyuynge? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the soule shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a wayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier than he: A wayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The VII. Chapter.

Who knoweth what is good for man lyuynge, in the dayes of his wayne life, which is but a shadowe? Who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? A good name is more worth then a precious ointment, and the daye of death is better than the daye of byrth.

Cant. 1. 2

It is better to go in to an house of mournyng, then in to a banquet house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is lyuynge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for when the countenaunce is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of the wyse is in the mournyng house, but the herte of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, then to heare the songe of foolles. For the laughinge of foolles is like crackinge of thornes vnder a pott. And this is but a wayne thinge.

Pro 27. 1

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle herte. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The pacient of spiete is better then the hie mynded. Be not hastily angrie in thy mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that the dayes of the olde tyme were better, then they that be now? for that were no wyse question. Wyssdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wysdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowle ge and wysdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Considre the worke of God, how that no man can make the chinge straight, which he maketh croked. Use well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of myssfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothin ge els.

C These ij. thiges also haue I cosidred in y tyme of vanite: & the iust man perisheth for his rightuousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therfore be thou nether to rightuous ner ouer wyse, & thou perish not: be nether to vnrightuous also ner to foo lish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let & go out of thy hande. For he & feareth God shal escape them all.

2 RE. 20. C
Eccl. 7. 2
2 Par. 6. 6
LUC. 17. 2

Wysdome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the citie: for there is not one iust vpo earth, & doeth good, & sinneth not. Take not hede vnto enery wor de & is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruante curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these thinges haue I pro ued because of wysdome: for I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee & so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde al so vnto knowlege, and to seke out sciēce, wis dome and vnderstondinge: to knowe the foo lishnesse of the vngodly, and the erreure of dotinge fooles. And I founde, that a wo man is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes. Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her, but the synner will be taken w her.

Iob 28 b
D Beholde (sayeth y preacher) this haue I diligently searched out & proued, & I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousand men I ha ue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. Lo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust & right, but they seke dyuerse soetyties, where as no man hath wysdome & vnderstodinge, to geue answer there vnto.

Pro. 7. C

The VIII. Chapter.

Pro. 17. d
Wysdome maketh a mā's face to shy ne, but malice putteth it out of fa uoure. Repethe kynges comman demēt (I warne the) & the ooth & thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight, & se thou cōtinue in no euell thin ge.

ge: for what so ener ic pleaseth him, & doeth he. Like as when a kyng geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? Who so kepeth the commaundement, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discer neth tyme and maner: For enery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of care fulnes & sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyll tell him? Neither is there eny mā & hath power ouer y spiete, to kepe stil y spiete, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, ne ther maye vngodlynes deliuer him & med leth withall.

Leu. 18. 2
B All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto enery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lord shipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene y vngodly brought to their graues, and fallendowne from the hye and glonous place: in so moch & they were for gotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye & greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geneth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hun dieth tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with the that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. A gayne, as for the vngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prolonge his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God.

Psal. 35. e
C Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngod ly: A gayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of y rightuous. This me thinkē also a vaine thin ge. Therfore I commendē gladnesse, becau se a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his labour all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my myn de to lerne wysdome, and to knowe the tra uayle that is in the worlde (and that of soch a fashion, & I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all y workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto y workes that are do ne vnder y Sonne: and though he bestowe his labour to seke them out, yet can he not reach vnto the: yee though a wyseman wolde undertake to knowe them, yee might he not fynde them.

Ecclesiastes.

The x. Chap.

The IX. Chapter.

All these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seeke out. The righteous and wyse yee and their workes also are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the righteous as with the vngedly: with the good & cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not: like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is a frayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges y come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, & madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quye dogg (saye they) is better the a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe y they shall dye: but they y be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgottē, so y they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in y worlde, in all y is done vnder the Sonne. Go thou y waye then, cate thy bried with ioye, & drynke y wyne w gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garnytes be all waye whyre, & let y heade want no oyntment. Use thy self to lyue ioyfully w thy wife when thou louest, all y daies of thy life (which is but vayne) y God hath geue the vnder the Sonne, all y dayes of thy vanite: for y is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labo & trauayle y thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so ever thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amoge the deed (where as thou geest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowlege ner wysdome.

So I turned me vnto ocher thinges vnder y Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift: in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to fedynge, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sure: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connyng: but that all lyeth in tyme & fortune. For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fysh is atake with the angle, and as the bydes are caught w the snare: Eue so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it cometh sodenly vpon them.

This wysdome haue I seene also vnder y Sonne, & me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, & a fewme within it: so there came a greate kynge & beseged it, & made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which w his wysdome deliuered the cite: yet was there no body, y had eny respecte vnto soch a symple man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. Neuertheless, a symple mans wysdome is despysed, & his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre aboue the crienge of a captaine amoge fooles. For wysdome is better then harnesse: but one vnto thuse alone destroyeth moch good.

The X. Chapter.

Aked flies y corruppe swete oyntment & make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wysdome & hono of a foole. A wise mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A doctinge foole thinketh, y eue ry mā doth as foolishly as himself. If a principall spie be geue the to beare rule, he negligēt the in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were w a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue seene vnder the Sonne: namely, y ignorance y is comonly amonge prynces: in y a foole sytteth in greate dignite, & the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruantes ryde vpon horses, & prynces goinge vpon their feete as it were seruantes. But he y dyggeth vp a pytt, shal fall therin himself: & who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal bite him. Who so remoueth stones, shal haue trauayle withall: and he that heweth wod, shal be hurt therewith.

When an yron is blunt, and y poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome folowe diligence. A babler of his tonge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge. The wordes out of a wise mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnynge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclusion? The last ende of y foolish is greuous vnto the, while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

21 S Ende thy vytayles ouer the waters,
and so shalt thou fynde the after many yeares. Geue it awaye amonge se-nen or eight, for thou knowest not what misery shal come vps earth. Whē the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth.
And whē y tre falleth, (whether it be towarde the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth y wynkes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

22 Cease not thou therfore with thy han-des to sowe thy seede, whether it be in y mornyng or in the euenyng: for thou knowest not whether this or that shal prospere, yf they boch take, it is the better. The light is swete, y a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to loke vpon the Sonne. If a man lyue many yeares, and be glad in them all, let him remembere the dayes of darcknesse, which shal be many: y when they come, all thinges shal

but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in

y Moone and the starres be darckened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the raynes
when the keepers of the house shal tremble,
and when the stronge men shal bowe them-se they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waxe dymme: when the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and when y

voyce of the Myller shal be layed downe:
when men shal ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and when all y daughters of musyck shal be brought lowe: when men shal feare
in hye places, and be a frayd in the stretes:
when the Almonde tre shal be despyed, the greshopper borne out, and when greates pouerte shal breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go aboute the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and or the golden benche be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, y the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or dust be turned agayne vnto earth from whence it came, and but playne vanite.

The first Chapter.

A

That thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for y brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. Thy name is a swete smellynge oymment, therfore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

Eccl. 7. 2

The kynge hath brought me into his premye chambie. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thynke more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

Gen. 31. 6
2. Par. 3. 6

I am black (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes, and as the hanginges of Salomon: but yet am I faire & wel fauoured withal. Maruell not at me y I am so black, & why? y Some hath shyned vpon me. For whan my mothers childre had euell wil at me, they made me y keeper of the vynyarde. Thus was I fayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) wherethou fedest, wherethou retest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companyons.

If thou knowe not y self (o thou sayest amonge women) tha go y waye forth after y focestepes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede y goates besyde y shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary forthe (my loue) w myne hoest & with my charrettes, which shal be no fewer then pharaos.

Exo. 14. 6

C

Then shal thy cheskes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged w spages & goodly iswels: a neck bande of golde wil we make y w syluer bottons. When the kynge syttech at the table, he shal smell my flardus: for a bodell of Myre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vynyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

Cant. 4. 2

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou: thou hast dones eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well fauored art thou? Oure bed is deckt with floures, y sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypressse.

The ij. Chap.

The II. Chapter.

I Am the floure of the felde, and lylie of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me w grapes, coforte me with apples, for I am sick of loue. His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

Cant. 8. 8

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Does & hyndes of the felde, y ye wake not vpon my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

We thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there cometh he hoppinge vpon y mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roo or a yonge hart. Beholde, he stondereth behynde of wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, & pepeth thow the grate.

My beloued answered & sayde vnto me: O stode vpon my loue, my doue, my beutyfull, & come: for lo, the wynter is now past, the rayne is awaie & gone. The floures are come vpon in the felde, the twystinge tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure lende. The syge tre bryngeth forth hir syges, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

O stode vpon my loue, my beutyfull, and come (my deuie) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wall: O let me se thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Gett vs the foxes, yee the litle foxes that hurte y vynes, for oure vynes beare blossoms.

My loue is myne, and I am his, (which febeth amonge the lylies) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come agayne pruely (o my beloued) like as a Roo or a yonge harte vnto the mountaynes.

Cant. 5. 2

The III. Chapter.

I might in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligent. I sought I him, but I founde him not. I wil get vpon (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all y stretes wil I seke him whom my soule loueth, but whan I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute y cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

So whan I was a litle past them, I founde him whom my soule loueth. I haue gotten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go, vntill I brynge him into my mothers house, and in to hir chambie that bare me.

Cant. 1. b I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Who is this, that cometh out of y wyl-derness like pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myre, frankincense and all maner spyes of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomons bedsteade there stonde LX. valeant men of the mightie in Israel. They holde swerdes every one, & are experte in warre. Every man hath his swerde vps his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bedsteade of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, y seate of purple, y grounde pleasauntly paved for the daughters of Ierusalem.

Go forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and behold kynge Salomon in the crowne, wher with his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the gladnesse of his hert.

The III. Chapter.

Cant. 1. c Chow fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast dones eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within.

Cant. 6. a Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clypped, which go first vp from the washinge place: where every one beareth two twynes, and not one vnfrutefull amonge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are lovely: thy cheskes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyed hyd within. Thy neck is like the tower of David buylded with bulwoikes, wher vpon there haue a thousand sheldes, yee all the weapes of the gaintes. Thy two brestes are like two twynes of yonge roes, which fede amonge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myre, and to the hyll of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spott is there in the.

Cant. 7. a B Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppe of Amanah, from the toppe of Sanir and Hermon, from the Lyons demies and from the mountaynes of y leoparides. Thou hast wounded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and lovely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse: Thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices. Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony combe, yee mylke and hony is vnder thy tongue, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsense.

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water sprynge, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradyse of pograntes & swete frutes: as Cypresse, Cardus, Saffron, Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myre, Aloes, and all the best spyes. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of luyngge waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vp thou northwynde, comethou southwynde, and blowe vps my gardē, that the smell ther of maye be caried on every syde: See that my beloued maye come in to my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therein.

The V. Chapter.

C Come in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myre & my spice. I wil eate my hony and my hony combe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylke. Eate o (ye frendes) drynke and be mery, o ye beleued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert watynge, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue; my dore, my derlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

I haue put off my cote, how cā I do it on agayne? I haue washed my feet, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued to warde him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My handes dropped w Myre, & the Myre ranne downe my fyngers vpon y lock. Neuerthelesse whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

How like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I soughte hī, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answer. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, founde me, smote me, and wounded me: See they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my garnēt fro me. I charge you therfore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for lone.

Who is thy lone above other loners, O thou

sayest amonge women? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other louers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a synguler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are busshed, browne as the euenynge: his eyes are as the eyes of doves by the water brokes, washen with mylke, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: his chekes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaries plate all maner of swete thinges: his lippes droppe as the floures of the most principall Myrie, his handes are full of golde rynges and precions stones. His body is as the pure yuery, deckt over with Sapphyres: his legges are as the pilers of Narbell, sett vpon sockettes of golde: his face is as Libanus, and as the beavy of the Cedre trees: his throte is swete, yee he is altogether louely. Such one is my loue (o ye daughters of Jerusalem) such one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue goneth (o thou sayest amonge women) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye see him with the?

The VI. Chapter.

When my loue is gone downe into his garden, vnto the swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather fleures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which feederh amonge the lilies.

Thou art pleasaunt (o my loue) euen as loneynesse itself, thou art sayre as Jerusalem, glorious as an armie of men with their banners (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude) Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of goates open the mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe the be clyped, which go out of the washyng place: where eury one beareth two twynes, and not one vnfrutefull amonge them. Thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes the which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge women without nombre. But one is my doue, my derlyng. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, and deare vnto her that bare her. When the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: yee the quenes and concubines prayd her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the momynge? sayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armie of men with their banners?

I wente downe into the nutt garden, to see what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vynyarde floushed, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of the prynce of my people made me sodenly afraied. Turne agayne, turne agayne (O thou Salomite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that we maye loke vpon the.

The VII. Chapter.

What pleasure haue ye more in the Salomite, than when she daunseth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadinges with thy shues, thou prynces daughter? Thy chees are like a sayre iewel, which is wrought by a conynge workmaster: Thy nauell is like a round goblett, which is neuer without drynke: Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, sett aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twynes of yongerees: Thy neck is as it were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like the water poles in Hesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which looketh towarde Damascus: That heade that stonderth vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like the kynges purple folden vp in plates.

O how sayre and louely art thou (my derlyng) in pleasures: Thy stature is like a date tree, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vp into the date tree, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrils like the smell of apples, and thy throte like the best wyne.

This shalte pure and cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne him vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth into the felde, and take our reldginge in the vyllages. In the momynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go see the vynyarde: yf it be spronge forth, yf the grapes be growne, and yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shal the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde our doores: There (o my loue) haue I kepte vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and elde.

The VIII. Chapter.

What I might fynde the without the kysse, whom I loue as my brother, which suckte my mothers brestes: and that thou woldest not be offended, yf I take the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spiced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, and his right hande embraceth me.

The prophet Esay.

This is the prophecy of Esay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Jerusalem: In the tyme of Osi-as, Joathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges
of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

Hear o heauen, hearken o earth,
for the LORDE speaketh: I haue nourished & brought up children, and they are fallen awaye fro me. An oxe knoweth his LORDE, and an Ass his masters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstandinge. Alas for this synful people, which are experte in blasphemies, a fra-werde generacion, vnnatural children. They haue forsaken the LORDE, they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherefore shoulde ye be plaged eny more? For ye are ever fallinge awaye. The whole heade is sick, and the her-te is very heuy. From the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parce in all yo^r body: but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be helped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oyntment.

Your londe lieth waiste, youre cities are brient vp, youre enemies deuoure youre londe, and ye must be sayne to stonde, and loke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Morouer y^e daughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vynyarde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged citie. And excepte the LORDE of hostes had left us a fewe alyue: we shoulde haue bene as Sodoma, & like vnto Gomorra.

Hear the worde of the LORDE ye ty-rautes of Sodoma: and hearken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
Why offre ye so many sacrifices vnto me? I am discontent for the brient offringes of we-

The i. Chap. Ho. ij.

thers, and with y^e fatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye appeare before me, who requyret h you to creake within my porches? Offre me no mo oblacions, for it is but lost labour. I abhoire youre incense. I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, your Sabbathes and solempne dayes. Your fastinges are also in wayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen fro my very hart. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out yo^r hon-des, yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

Wash you, make you cleane, put awaye yo^r euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, deliuer
the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complaynte come before you. Now go to (saith the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though your synnes be as reade as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like whyte woll? Is it not so? If ye be louynge & obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. But yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the right-nous citie (which was full of equyte) is become vnfaithfull as an whore: rightuousnes dwelt in it, but now murther. Thy Silver is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myrte w^o water. Thy prynces are traytours and com-panyons of thenes. They love gyses altogether, and solowe rewardes. As for the fa-therles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therefore speaketh the LORDE
God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah
I must ease me of myne enemies, and a venge me vpoⁿ the. And therefore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the synest and purest, and put out all thy leade, & set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from y^e begynnynge. Then shal thou be called the rightuous citie, the faithfull ci-
tie. But Sion shalbe redeemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with rightuousnesse. For the transgressours and vngodly, and soch as are become vnfaithfull vnto the LORDE, must all together be vtterly destroyed.

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oke-trees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardēes that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, and as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to due strawe, and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The seconde Chapter.

Wouer this is the worde that was opened vnto Esaye the some of Amos, vpon Iuda and Jerusalem. It will be also in process of tyme: That the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shalbe y^e chefe amonge hilles, and exalted aboue all litle hilles. And al heithē shal please vnto him and the multitude of people shal go vnto him. speaking thus one to another: vp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of y^e God of Jacob: y^e he maye shewe vs his waye, and y^e we maye walke in his pathes. For y^e lawe shal come out of Sion, and the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swordes and speares, to make scythes, sycles & sawes therof.

From that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, neither shal they lerne to fighthe from thence forth. It is so the that Ierie (o house of Jacob) vp, let vs walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abroad with thy people (o house of Jacob) for ye go farre beyonde yo^r fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers, whom ye haue as the phylistynes had) or in calkers of mens bytches, wherof ye haue to many. As soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stronge horses and no ende of youre charettes: Immediately was it ful of Idols also, euen workes of youre owne hondes, which ye your selues haue facioned, and youre fyngers haue made. There kneleth the man, there falleth the man downe before them, so y^e thou canst not bringe him awaye from thence.

And therfore get y^e soone in to some rock, and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from y^e glory of his Majesty. Which casteth downe y^e high lokes of presumptuous personnes, and bringeth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shal be exalted in y^e daye. For the daye of y^e LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde & presumptio, vpon all thē that exalte thē selues, and shal bunge them all downe: vpo all high & stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all costly towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon every thinge y^e is glorious and pleasaunt to lōke vpon.

And it shal bunge downe the pryde of man, and laye mans presumptionnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. But the Idols shal utterly be rote out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, and in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearfull iudge, and from the glory of his magesty: what tyme as he shal make hum vp to shake the earth. Then, thē shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (in which he neuertheles had made to honoure thē) vnto Molles and Bactes: that he maye the better crepe in to the canes and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from y^e sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

The thirde Chapter.

Very man can eschue a persone moued in danger, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal y^e LORDE of hostes take awaye fro Jerusalem & Iuda, all possessio & power, all meat and drinke, y^e capteyne and the sondyare, y^e iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde; and the honorable: the Senatours, and men of vnderstandinge: the masters of craftes and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre prynces (saierh the LORDE) and babes shal haue the rule of you. One shall ever be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his owne kynred by y^e bosome, and saye: thou hast clotheinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and parell.

Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Moreover, there is nether meate ner clotheinge in my house, make me no ruler of the people. For Jerusalem and Iuda must decaye, because that both their wordes and counsels are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magesty vnto anger. The chaunginge of their countenance bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes themselves, as the Sodo

C O my people, thy leders deceaue the, and treade out the waye of thy footsteppes.
The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stonder to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senacours and prynces of his people, and shal saye thus vnto them: It is ye that haue burne vp my vnyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wher

de, and come in with stretched out neckes, and wich vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in crippinge so nyce ly wih their fete:

browe bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgeousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, parlettes, and colares, braceletes and hoones, y goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymet, busshes and headbandes, rynges and garlandes, holy daye clothes and vales, kerch-ues and pyrmes, glaisses and smockes, bonet-tes and raches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe stynck amonge them. And for their gyrdles there shalbe losse bondes. And for wel-fayre there shalbe ba'dnesse. In steade of a stomacher, a sack cloth, and for their bewty solate folck vpon the earth. Then shal seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye:

we will laye all oure meat and cloothinge together in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprose maye be take from us. After that ty-

Jerusalem be called holy: namely all such as are witten amonge the lyuynge at Jerusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shal wash awaye the desolacion of the dought-ters of Sio, ad pouрге the bloude out from Jerusalem, w y wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Moreover vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE prouye a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shynninge of a flammyng syre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserved. And Jerusalem shal be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of here in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The V. Chapter

Now well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vnyearde. My beloued frende hath a vnyearde in a very frutefull plenteous ground. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylde he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin. And afterwarde when he looked y it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Citysens of Jerusalem and whole Juda:) Judge I praye you betwixte me: and my wyne gardinge. What more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Wherfore then hath it geuen thornes, where I looked to haue had grapes of it?

Well, I shall tell you how I will do w
my vnyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perishe, and breake downe y wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waiste, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and breares. I wil also forbyd y cloude, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vnyarde of the LORDE of hoostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Juda his fayre plantin-ge. Of these he looked forequyte, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but miserie.

Wo to you that ioyne one house to another, and bunge one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more ground. Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone: The LORDE of hoostes rownerh me thus i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgeous houses be so waiste, that no man shall dwell in the? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of seide shal geue
but thre.

The prophete Esay.

Wo be vnto them that cryse vp early to vse them selues in dronkennes, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, tabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regard not the worke of the LORDE, and consider not the operaciō of his hondes. Therefore cometh my folke also in captiuyte, because they haue no vnderstandynge. Their glory shalbe myrte with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurst. Therefore gapeth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdom, with such as reioyse therein, maye descend in to it.

Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hostes, y holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equitye and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal y lambs eat their apoynted feeder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Wo vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto the, as it were with a coorde: and synne, as it were with a cart repe. Whiche vse to speake on this maner: let hym make hym self now, and go forth w his worke, that we maye se it. Let the counsell of y holy one of Israel come, and drawe nie, y we maye knowe it.

Wo vnto them that call euil good, and good euil: which make darcknesse light, and light darcknesse, y make sower swete, and swete sower. Wo vnto them that are wyse in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue vnderstandinge. Wo vnto them, y are conynge men to suppe out wyne, and experte to set vp dronkenesse. These gyue sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the righteous.

Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful,) their blossome shal vanishe awaye like dust or smoke for they despise the lawe of the LORDE of hostes, and blaspheme the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

Therefore is the wrath of the LORDE kyndled also agaynst his people, and he shal stretch his honde at them: yee he shal synne so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcases shal lye in the open stretes, like myre. After all this, the wrath of God shal not cease, but he shal stretch his hēde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, and call vnto them in a farre countrie: and beholde, they shal come hastily with spede. There is not one faynt nor feble amonge them, no nor a slegish nor sleperry parson. There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, nor loose the lacher of his shue. Their arrows are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoes are like flynt, and their cart wheles like a stormy wynde. Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons whelpes. They shal roare, and hatch vp the praye, and no man shal recouer it or get it from the. In that daye they shal be so scarce vpon them, as the see. And yf we loke vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. Yf we loke to heauen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperacion.

The vi Chapter.

In the same yere y kynge Osias dyed, I sawe the LORDE sitteinge vpon an high and glouious seate, and his trayne fylled y palace from aboue flakred the Seraphins, wherof enery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech covered his face, w twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hostes. The whole worlde is ful of his glory. See the easles and doredokes moued at their crienge, and the horse was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: Who is me. For I was astonished: that I (which am a man of vnclene lippes, and dwell amonge people y hath vnclene lippes also:) Shulde se y kynge and LORDE of hostes with my neeyes.

Then flew one of the Seraphins vnto me, hauinge a hote cole in his honde, which he had taken from the auter with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, and thy vnrightuousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgiven. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge aduysement on this maner: Whom shal I sende, and who wilte oure messaunger? The I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shall heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstonde, ye shal plane lyse, and not perceaue. Harden the harte of this people, stoppe their eares, and shynt their eyes, that they se not w their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnderstande not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

Then spake I: LORDE, how longe shal

For the LORDE shal take the men farre awaye, so that the londe shal lye waiste. Neuertheles, the tenth parte shal remayne therein, for it shal conuertere and be frute ful. The seuenth Chapter.

A happened in the tyme of Ahas the sonne of Ionathas, which was the sonne of Joathan Kyng of Iuda: that Rezin the Kyng of Siria, and Poca Rome lies sonne, Kyng of Israel: wente vp to ward Jerusalem to beseege it (but wanne it not). Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, y Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herce quaked (yee and y hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Jasub) at the heade of y ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thyself and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokynge fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Rome lies sonne: because that the Kyng of Siria Ephraim and Rome lies sonne haue wickedly conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vexe the, and brynge them vnder vs, and set a Kyng there, euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saith the LORDE God ther to, It shal not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the headcitie of y Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threescore yere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chiefe cite of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Rome lies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.

Moreover, God spake vnto Ahas, sayen. gerrequyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneath or towarde y hight aboue. The sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then he are to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therfore the LORDE shal geue you a token of himself. Beholde, a virgin shal conceaue and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, y he maye knowe the euell, and chose y good. But orenner that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euell and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so a frayde for) shal be desolate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpon thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme y Ephraim departed from Iuda) thowow y kyng of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whistle for the flies y are aboute the water of Egypte, and for y Bees in the Assirians londe. These shal come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in y vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thinges, and in all comers.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shau the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beerd clene of, with the rasoure that he shal paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with y kyng of the Assirians. At the same tyme shal a man lye with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundaunce of mylke, he shal make butter and eat it. So that everyone which remaineth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluerlinges) shal be turned to briers and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arrows and bowes, so shal all the londe become briers and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are herren downe, thou shalt not come vpon them, for feare of briers and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The viij Chapter.

Worouer the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediately I called vnto me faithfull wytnesses: Vrias the prest, and Zacharias y sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maher schal haschbas, that is: a spedier robber, an hastie spoyle. For why, orenner the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, y is father, and mother: shal y riches of Damascus and y substance of Samaria be take awaye, thowow the kyng of y Assirians.

Neuertheles y people that haue brete

not increase the ioye also? They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in har-

of his oppressoure, as in y daye at Madiā.

Moroner all temerarious and scidicious power (yee where there is but a core fylde

For vnto us a childe shal be borne, and vnto us a sonne shal be geue. Vpon his shulder

do they seeke the LORDE of hostes. Therfore the LORDE shal rote out of Israel both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by y tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceainers. Soch as men thynke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

D Therfore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge me, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For they are altogether ypocrites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake foly. After all this shal not the LORDES wiath cease, but yet his honde shalbe stretched out still. For the vngodly burne, as a fyre in the bryers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wood or a redebush, so ascenderth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal y wiath of the LORDE of hostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shalbe consumed, as it were with fyre, no man shal spare his brother. If a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal fa mesch, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Every man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Juda. After all this shal not the LORDES wiath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The tenth chapter.

Woe be vnto you y make vnrightheous lawes, and deuyse thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: wherthorow the poore are oppriessed, on every syde, and the innocētes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wyddowes maye be youre praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherlesse. What will ye do in tyme of the visitacion and destruction, that shal come from farre? To whom will ye renne for helpe: or to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it: that ye come not amonge the prisoners, or lye amonge the deed? After all this shal not the wiath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

Woe be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wiath, in whose honde is the rod of my punysshment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypocritish poeple, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfauoure shal I send him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanyng is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saith: are not my pynces all kynges? Is not Calno as easie to wyne, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquere Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to overcome Damascus then Samaria? As who say: I were able to wyne the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not Jerusalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vnto Jerusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and the ir ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone as I haue perfourmed my whole worcke vpon the hyl of Syon and Jerusalem: then will I also vset the noble and stoune kyng of Assiria, with his wysdome and pryde. For he stondeth thus in his owne conceite: This do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wysdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their prynces: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath founde out the hostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, y darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whisper.

But doth he are booste it self, agaynst him y heweth therewith, or doth the sawe make any frakinge, agaynst him that ruleth it? That were even like, as yf the rod dyd exalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though y staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodd. Therfore shal the LORDE of hostes sende him pouerte in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. But the light of Israel shalbe y fyre, and his Sanctuary shalbe the flaine, and it shal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and bryers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddes and felde shalbe consumed with body and soule. As for himself, he shalbe as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shalbe of soch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

After y daye shal the remanant of Israel, and soch as are escaped out of the house of Jacob, seeke no more coforte at him that smote them, but shal comforte them selves with faithfulnessse and treuth in the LOR-

Then shall his burthen be taken from thy shul- ders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the sa- me yock shall corrupte for very fatnesse. He shall come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shall he muster his hoste, and go ouer y^e foorde. Gaba shall be their resting place, Abima shall easte- yde, Gaba Saul shall fle awaye. The voy- ce of y^e noyse of thy horses (o daughter Gal- lim) shall be herde vnto lais and to Ana- thoth, which also shall be in trouble. Mad- mena shall tremble for feare: but the cietyes of Gabun are many, yet shall he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shall he lift vpon his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and a- gaynst the hill of Jerusalem. But se, the LOR- DE God of hostes shall take awaye the prou- de from thence, wth feare. In their stretes were they gyrded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses z stretes was there nothinge, but mournyng and wepinge. Zesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Jahaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for verry sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre frateful bullock, they went vp to Luhith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for þ hurte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the graspe was wythred, the herbes destroyed, z what necessary grene thinge there was besyde. In like maner the thinge þ was left them of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Araby. The crie went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaïm vnto Beer, was there nothinge but mournyng. The xvi. Chapter.

21 Then sent the lordes of the lode a mā of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the daughter Sion. For as for the daughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byde, y is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre counceyl, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, as the night doth: hyde the chaced, & bewaie not thē that are fled, let the persecuted Moabites dwell amōge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppriesseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyrant dryueth vs out of oure londe. But y Trone of youre kyngdome is ful of grace, therfore he that sitteth vpon it w' faitfulness & treuth in the house of David, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly, acordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs pūde (shal they answer) it is wel knowne. And all though they be excellent, proude, arrogant, & hie mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therfore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, w' her thorrow they come all to mourne: & now y they be smytten, they take their deuylce beneath by the bryck wall, and make their complaynte.

The suburbs also of Hesebon were made waiste, & the princes of the Gentyles herwed downe y vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spied vnto Jazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their felues forth beyonde the see. Therfore I mourned for Jazer, & for y vynyardes of Sibma w' greate sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their harness & gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of y felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner sung. There wēte no treader in to the wyncpresse, their mery chere was layde downe. Wherfore my bely robled (as it had bene a lute) for Moabs sake, & myne inwarde membres, for the bryck walles sake. For it happened thus also: whē Moab sawe that she was turned vpsyde downe: she went vpon hie in to hir sanctuary, to make hir prayer there, but she might not be helped. This is the deuylce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In thre yere shal y power of Moab w' their pōpe (which is greate) be minished, like as y burthē of an hyred seruante: And as for y remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not rekened moch worth.

The xvij. Chapter.

This is the heuy burthē vpon Damascus: Beholde, Damascus shal be no more a ci te, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe waiste, The catel shal lie there, & nomā shal fraye thē awaye. Ephraim shal no more be strōge, & Damascus shal no more be a kyngdome. And as for y glory of y remnaunt of y Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childre of Israel, saith y LORDE of hostes. At that tyme also shal y glory of Jacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happē to thē, as when one sheareth in harvest, which cutteth his handful w' the sickle, & when one gathreth y sheaves together in the valley, of Rephaim, there remayneth yet some ears ouer. Or as whē one shateth an elyue tre, which syndeth but two or thre olyue beries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

Then shal man couerte agayne vnto his mater, & turne his eyes to the holy one of Israel. And shal not turne to the aulcers that are y worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he loke vpon groanes & ymages, which his syngers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once y forsake plowes & coine, which they forsake, for feare of y children of Israel.

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God y Saviour, & hast not called to remēbraunce. y rock of thy strength, Wherfore thou hast also set a saye plāte, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gane soone the frute of thy seide: But in the daye of harvest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that rush in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. For though so many people increafe as the flowinge waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyle wynde thorrow a stome. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with thē, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

Soch as laboure vpon flax z sylcke, shal come to ponerte, z they also that receue fyne workes. All the poundes of Egypte, all the pelicie of their Meates z diches shal come to naught.

Rec the vndisciete prynces of Zean, the counceill of the wyse Senateurs of Pharaos, shal turne to foolishnesse: These that darre boast z saie of Pharaos behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of y' olde regall progeny. But where are now thy wyse men? Let them tel the z shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egypte. Sooles are these prynces of Zean, z proude are the prynces of Tiopeh: yee they dysceane Egypte with the nobilitie of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egypte dronckē with the spiete of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: eue like as a dronckē mā goeth spewing aboute. For Egypte shal lacke good counceill, so y they shal not knowe what to do, nether beginnyng nor ende, nether vpon the lōde nor water. The shal y Egyptians be like vnto womē, a frayde z astōied, at the lysteinge vp of the hōde, which y LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Iuda also shal make the Egyptians a frayde, who so doth but speake vpon it. shal put them in feare: And that because of the counceill, which y LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed agaynst them. Then shal the fyue cities of Egypte speake with the Canaanites tunge, and swear by the LORDE of hoostes, z Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an aulter in the myddest of the londe of Egypte, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. ye captaynes, take you to youre shyldes, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchman, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whē he had wayted diligēly, he sawe two hoismen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With y^e came there one rydinge vpon a charet, which answered, and sayde: Babilon is fallen, she is turned vpsyde downe, and all y^e ymages of hir goddes are smytten to y^e ground. This (o my floure throschers and fanners) haue I herde of the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel, to shewe it vnto you.

What hast thou there to do, that thou clymnest vp in to the house toppe, o thou citie of miracles, sedicious and wilfull? seinge, thy slayne mē are nether killed wth swerde, ner deed in batell? For all thy captaynes gat them to their houses from the ordinaunce, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaued y^e, I sayde: awaye fro me, y^e I maye wepe bytterly. be out the valley of Visiōs, and breake downe the walles, with soch a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

B I sawe the Elamites take the quyners to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnessse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the coveringe of Juda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the tymbrie house. There shal ye see the riftes in the walles of the cite of David, wherof there shal be many. Ye shal gather together the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Ierusalem, and breake of some of the to kepe y walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwyxe y twa yne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothinge regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal y LORDE of hoostes cal mē to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaughter oxē, they kyll shepe, they eate costely meate, & drynke wyne: let vs eate and drinke, tomorrow we shal die. Neuer the les whē the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shal be remitted, ye must die for it. This hath y LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

C Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? & from whence comest thou? that thou hast made the a grave here? For he had caused a costly combe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will decke the of another fashion, and put vpon the a strange clothe. He shal carie y in to a farre countre, like a ball with his hondes, There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vyllayne of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

D After this wil I cal my seruante Eliakim, y sonne of Helkias, and araye him with thy cote, and gyde him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shal be a father of the citisens of Ierusalem, and of the kynred of Juda. I will also laye the keye of Davids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shyte, and yf he do shyte, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hye faithfulnessse, and he shal be vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal hage vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childē, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure & musike. This shal come to passe, (saith the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, y is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulnessse: shal be plucked of, And whē the weight that hangerh vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

S I heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourn ye shippes of Tharsis, for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Indwellers of the Ilandes, the marchauntes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of al people. Sidō is sory for it, yee and all y power of the see cōplaneth, and saith: O y I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, y I had necher nourished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egyp̄te perceaueth it, she wil be as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourn ye y dwel in the Iles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite? whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commend her so greatly? Who hath deuysed soch thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of al citi- es, whose marchaūtes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? But the LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (o thou doughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

Thus the LORDE that remoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out: hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrrh (o thou doughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethēes. Scende vp therfore, and go where the enemy wil carie the, wherethou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them, Assur buylded them: he set vp his castels & palaces, and brokethem downe agayne. And therfore mourn (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shal be throwne downe.

After that, shal the lxx yeares of Tirus (even as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happen to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the citie, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with diuerse balettes, wherby thou mayest come in to acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. The LORDE shal visit the citie of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundyse, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiēge and wynnynge, shalbe halowed vnto the L O R D E. For then shal they laye vpon nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaūdisse of Tirus shal belōge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the feedinge and susteninge of the hūgrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

BEholde, y LORDE shal waiste and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the earth desolate, & scatere abroad y inhabitours therof. Then shal the priest be as the people, the master as the seruaunt, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that leueth vpon vsury, like him y boroweth vpon vsury, the creditoure, as the better. See miserably shal y worlde be waysted & clene destroyed. For y LORDE hath so determed in himself. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of y earth shal perishe & fal awaye, the proude people of y worlde shal come to naught, For y earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

B For why they haue offended y lawe, changed the ordinaūces, and made the euerlastinge testamēt of none effecte, And therfore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they y dwel therō, haue synned. wherfore they shal be brent also, and those that remayne, shalbe very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all y haue bene merry in harte, shal sighe. The myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to thē that drinke it, the wicked cities shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

In the firetes shal there be lift vp a crie because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanishe awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shalbe snytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smyteth downe y olyues, y are left vpon the tre: or sekethe a fette grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, & shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, even from the see, & prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and flōdes. We heare songes sung to the prayse of the rightuous, fro al the endes of the worlde. Therfore I must speake: O my vnfruitfulnesse, o my ponerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therfore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundacion of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greare crack, it shal haue a sore ruine, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a dronken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdeedes shal lie so heuye vpon her, y she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and y kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in o ne warde and punished innumerable daies. The Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hoostes shal rule them at Jerusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent counsell.

The xxv. Chapter

GLORDE, thou art my God, I wil prayse the, and magnifie y name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, accordinge to thine olde counsels, truly and stedfastly. Thou makest of corones, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the citie, that they shal neuer be buylded agayne. Therfore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strength for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euil wether, a shadowe agaynst the heate. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a stronge whylle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrantes.

plenteous, costly, pleasant feast, of fat and welshed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Upon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale y^e hāgeth before y^e face of al people, and the coueringe wherwith all Gentiles are conered. As for death, he shal utterly cōsume it. The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusioⁿ of his people thorow y^e whole worlde. For y^e LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse & delyte in his health. For the hōde of y^e LORDE cōsisteth vpon this hill. But Moab shal be chiefflye downe vnder him, like as the straw is trode vnder fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swynne. And wth the power of his hōdes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes & hie walles: he shal breke them, cast thē downe, and sell thē to the grounde in to dust.

The xxvj. Chapter.

He casteth thē to the groue, yee eue in to y^e myre, y^e the y maye be trode vnder the fete of the symple, & with the sieppes of the poore. Thou (LORDE) cōsidreth the path of y^e rigeneus, whether it be right, or whether the waye of y^e rightuous be right. Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgements, thy name and thy remēbraunce reioyse the soule. My soule lusteth after the all the night lōge, & my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse.

But the vngodly (though he haue recaued grace) yet lernech he not rightuousnesse, but in that p^lace where he is punished, he offendeth, & feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

The malicious Tyrantes whē they die, are neither in life nor in the resurrection, for thou visitest thē and rootest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increacest the people (O LORDE), thou increacest the people, thou shalt be praysed and magnified in all y^e endes of the worlde. The people that seke vnto the in trouble, that same aduersite which they complaine of, is vnto thē a chastenyng before the. Like as a wise w^{om} childe (whē hir trauayle cometh vpon her) is ashamed, crieth and suffreth the payne: Eue so are we (O LORDE) in thy sight. We are with childe, we trauayle, & beare, & with the spere we bringe forth health, wherethorow the earth is vnderstroyed, and the inhabitours of the worlde perish not.

But as for thy dead men and onrs, that be departed, they are in life and resurrection. They lie in the earth, they wake, & haue ioye: for y^e dew is a dew of life & light. Vnto y^e place of the malicious Tyrantes is falle awaye. So go now my people in to thy chābre, and shut the doore to the, and suffre no ro y^e twidlinge of an eye, till the wrath be cuerpast. And all visi ons shalbe vnto you, as the wordes that stonde in a sealed lettre, when one offreth it to a man that is lerned, and sayeth: rede vs this lettre. Thē he answereth: I cā not rede it, for it is shutt. But yfit be geue to one y is not lerned, or sayde vnto him: rede this lettre: Then sayeth he. I can not rede.

Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE: For so moch as this people diaweth nye me w their mourh, and prayseth me highly with their lippes (where as there herte neuer the les is farre frome, and the feare which they owe vnto me, that turne they to mens la wes and doctrynes) therfore wil I also she we vnto this people, a maruelous terrible and greate thinge (Namely this:) I wil de stroye the wisdome of their wise, and the vn derstōdinge of their lerned men shal perish. Wo be vnto them that seke so depe, to hy de their ymaginacion be fore the LORDE, which rehearce their cosicels in y darknes, and saye: who seith vs, or who knoweth vs?

Which ymaginacion of yours is euen as when the potters claye taketh ad visemēt, as though the worke might saye to y wor ke master: make me not, or as when an er then vessel saith of the potter: he vnder stondest not. Se ye not that it is hard by, that Libanus shalbe turned in to Char mel, and that Charnel shalbe taken as a wodde? Then shal deaf men vnderstōde the wordes of the boke, and the eyes of the blynde shal se without eny cloude or dark nes. The oppiessed shal holde a mery feast in the LORDE, and the poore people shal reioyse in the holy one of Israel.

Then shal the furious people ceasse, and y mockers shal be put awaye, and all they y do wronge shalbe rooted out, soch as la boure to drawe mē vnto synne: and y discea ue him, which reproueth them in the gate, & soch as turne good personnes to vanite.

And therfore the LORDE (euen the de fender of Abraham) saith thus vnto the house of Jacob: Now shal not Jacob be ashamed, nor his face cōfounded, when he seith amonge his children (whom my hon des haue made) soch as halowe my name amonge them: that they maye sancifie the holy one of Jacob, and feare the God of Is 21 Woe be to those shewtunge children (saith the LORDE) which sette counsel, but not at me: which take a webbe in honde, but not after my will: that they maye heape one synne vpon another. They go downe into Egypte, (and are me no counsel) to sette helpe at the power of pharaos, and comforte in the shadowe of the Egipcians. But pharaos helpe shalbe youre confucion, and the comforte in the Egipcians shadowe shalbe youre owne shame. Your rulers haue bene at Zoan, and y^e messangers came vnto Hanes. But ye shal all be ashamed of the people y^e maye not helpe you, which shal not bringe you strength or comforte, but shame and confucion.

22 Your bestes haue borne burthens vpon their backes towarde the South, thorow the waye that is ful of perrell and trouble, because of the lyō and lyones, of the Cockatrice and shutyng dragon. Yee the Mules bare youre substance, and the Camels broughe y^e treasure vpon their croked backes, vnto a people that can not helpe you. For the Egipcians helpe shalbe but vane and lost. Therefore I tolde you also y^e youre pryde shulde haue an ende. Wherefore go hence, and write them this in their tables, and note it in a booke: that it maye remayne by their posterite, and be stil kepte. For it is an obstinate people, vnfaithful children, children that will not heare the lawe of the LORDE.

For the LORDE God, euen the holy one of Israel hath promised thus: With stil sittinge and rest shal ye be healed, In quyetnesse and hope shal youre strength lie. Not with standinge ye regarde it not, but ye will saie: No, for thus are we constrained to fle vpon hoises. (And therefore shal ye fle) we must ryde vpon swift bestes, and therefore youre persecutours shal yet be swifter. But ye shal synge, as the vse is in y^e night of the holy solemnite. The LORDE also shal set vp the power of his voyce, and declare his terrible arme, with his angrie countenance, yee and the flame of the consuming fyre, with earth quake, tempest of wynde, and hale stones. Then shal the Assirian feare also, because of the voyce of the LORDE, which shal shryte him with the rodde. And the same rodde which the LORDE w^{ill} sende vpon him, shal moue the whole foundation: with troympet, with noyse of warre and battell to destroye. For he hath prepared the fyre of payne from the begynnyng, yee even for kynges also. The xxxi. Chapter.

Unto them that go downe into Egypte for helpe, and trust in horses, and comforte them selues in Charettes, because they be many, and in horse mē because they be lustie and stronge. But they regarde not the holy one of Israel, and they aske no question at the LORDE. Where as he neuer theles plageth y^e wicked, and yet goeth not from his worde, whā he steppeth forth and taketh the victory agaynst the heuhold of the frauwerde, and agaynst the helpe of euil deers. Now the Egyptians are men, and not God, and their horses fleshy and not sperte. And as soone as the LORDE stretcheth out his hande, then shal the helper fall, and he that shulde haue bene helped, and shal altogether be destroyed. For thus hath the LORDE spokē vnto me: Like as the Lyon or lyōs whelpeth vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not a frayde, though y^e multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, neither abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hostes come downe from the mount Sion, and defende his hill. Like as bydes flotie aboute their nestes, so shal the LORDE of hostes kepe, saue, defende and deliuer Jerusalem. Therefore (o ye childre of Israel turne agayne, like as ye haue exceded in youre goinge back. For in y^e daye everyman shal cast out his Idols of

This hath y^e LORDE spokē, whose lichte burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Jerusalem.

The xxxij. Chapter.

Behold, the kinge shal governe a fter y^e rule of rightuousnes, and y^e princes shal rule accordinge to the balauce of equite. He shal be vnto mē, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as a ryuer of water in a thirstie place, and y^e shadowe of a greater rock in a due lode. The eyes of the feinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligent heed. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparfite tūge shal speake plainly and distinctly. Then shal the nygarde be no more called gentle, nor the churle lyberall. But the churle wil be churlishly mynded, and his hert wil worke euell and playe the ypocrite, and ymagyn abheminacions agaynst God, to make the hungrie leane, and to withholde dunke from the thirstie: These are the perious weapons of the enuets, these be his shameful counsels: that he maye begyle the poore with disceitful workes, yee even there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. But the liberall person ymagineth honest thinges, and cometh vp with honesty.

Up (ye rich and ydle cities), harken vnto my voyce. Ye careles cities, marke my wordes. After yeares and dayes shal ye be brought in feare, o ye carelesse cities. For harvest shal be out, and the grape gatheringe shal not come. O ye rich ydle cities, ye that feare no parell, ye shal be abashed and remoued: when ye se the barrenesse, the nakednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knocke vpon youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the fruteful vynyarde. My peoples felde shal bringe thornes and thistels, for in every house is voluptuousnes & in the cities, wilfulnes. The palaces also shal be broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towers and bulwerkes shal be become dennes for evermore, the pleasure of Mulee shal be turned to pasture for shepe: Vnto the tyme that y^e sperte be poured vpon vs from aboue.

And the rewarde of rightuousnesse shalbe peace, and hir frute rest and quietnesse for ever. And my people shal dwel in the ynnnes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in the all. And when the hale falleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the citie. O how happy shal ye be, when ye shal safely sowe youre seede besyde all waters & dryue thither the fete of youre oxen & asses.

Therefore wo vnto the (robber) shalt not thou be robbed also, and vnto the that laiest wait, as who saye there shulde no waite be layde for the: Wo vnto the which doest hurte, euen so shalt thou be hurt also. And as thou layest waite, so shal waite be layde for the also.

LORDE be merciful vnto vs, we wait for the. Thine arme is at a poynte to vset vs, but be thou oure health in the tyme of trouble. Graunte that the people maye fle at the anger of thy voyce, & that at thy vpstondinge the Gentiles maye be scatted abroad, and that their spoyle maye be gathered, as the greshoppers are comonly gathered together in to the pyt. Stonde vp LORDE, thou that dwellest on hie: Let Sion be fylled with equyte and rightuousnesse. Let treuth and faithfulness be in hir tyme: power, health, wisdom, knowlege & the feare of God are hir treasure. Beholde, their aungels crie with out, the messengers of peace wepe bitterly. The stretes are waite, there walkech no man therein, the appoyntment is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a spote, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basan & Charnel are turned upside downe. And therefore saith y LORDE: I wil vp, now wil I get vp, now wil I arise. Ye shal conceaue stubble, and beare strawe, & youre sprete shal be the fyre, that it maye consume you: & the people shalbe burnt like lyme, & as thornes burne that are hewen of, & cast in the fyre.

Now herken to (ye that are farre of) how I do with them, & considre my glory, yet that be at honde. The synners at Sion are a frayde, a sodane fearfulness is come vpon the ypocrytes. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumynge fyre? which of vs maye abyde that everlastinge heate? he that ledeth a godly life (saye I) & speaketh the treuth: he that abhorreth to do violence and disceate: he that kepeth his hōde that he touch no rewarde: which stoppeth his eares, that he heare no conucl agaynst the innocent: which holdeth downe his eyes, that he se no euil. he it is, that shal dwel on hie, whose sauegarde shalbe in the true rocke, to him shalbe geuen the right true meat & drynke. His eyes shal se the tynge in his glory: & in the wyde worlde, and his herte shal delite in the feare of God. What shal then become of the scribe? of the Senatoure? what of him that teacheth childen? There shalt thou not se a people of a straunge tynge, to haue so diffused a language, that it maye not be vnderstonde: nether so straunge a speache, but it shal be perceaued.

There shal Sion be sene, the head citie of oure solempne feastes. There shal thine eyes se Jerusalem that glouous habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue, whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Majesty of the LORDE shal there be present amōge vs. In that place (where sayre broad ryuers & streames are) shal nether Gallie rowe, ner greateshippe sale. For the LORDE shalbe oure capteyne, the LORDE shalbe oure lawe geuer, the LORDE shalbe oure kinge, & he himself shalbe oure Sauoure. There are the coardes so layd abrode, that they can not be better: The mast set vp of soch a fashion, that no banner ner sale hāgeth therō: but there is dealed greatespoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. Therelieth no mā that saith: I am sick, but all euil is taken awaye from the people, that dwel there.

The xxxij. Chapter.

Come ye heithen & heare, take heede ye people. Herken thou earth & all that is therein: thou rounde compass & all that groweth ther vpon: for the LORDE is angrie with al people, & his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, & to slaye them. So that their slayne shalbe cast wat, & their bodies stincke: that eue the very hilles shalbe wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shalbe consumed, & the heauen shal folde together like a roll, & all the starres therof shall fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and fygetrees. For my swearde (saith he) shalbe bathed in heauen, & shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeaunce.

E For God shal spiede out the lyne of desolacion vpon it, & weye it with the stones of emptynes. When Kinges are called vpo, the re shalbenone, and all pynces shalbe awaye. Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettles & thistles in their stronge holdes, & the dragons maye haue their pleasure therein, & that they maye be a counce for Estriches. In the wilderness also there shal welles sprunge, and floudes of water in the deserte. The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thursie to sprunges of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe sweete floures and grene ruffhes. There shalbe footpathes & comon stretes, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vnclene person shal go thorow it, for the LORDE himself shal go with the that waye, and the ignorant shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no rauynginge beast shal come therein nor be there, but men shal go there fre and safe. And the redeemed of the LORDE shal conuerte, and come to Sion with thankesgeuinge. Euerlastinge ioye shal they haue, pleasure & gladnesse shalbe amōgethem, And as for all sorow and heuynes, it shal vanish awaye.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

In the xliij. yeare of Kinge Ezechias, came Sennacherib Kinge of the Assirians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the Kinge of the Assirias sent Rabfaches from Lachis toward Jerusalem, agaynst Kinge Ezechias, with a greuous hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow y fullers lode. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim helchias sonne the presydent, Sobna the scribe, and Joab Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabfaches sayde vnto them: Tel Ezechias, that the greates Kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto: Thou thinkest (peraduēture) that thou hast counce & power ynough, to mayntene this warre: or els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thy self of frome: lo, Thou puttest thy trust in a broken staffe of rebe (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde & shuteth him thorow. de horses: Art thou able to set me there vp? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest pryncer that my LORDE hath, how darrest thou trust in y^e charrettes and horse men of Egypte? Moreover, thinkest thou y^e I am come downe hither, to destroye this londe with out the LORDEs will? The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna & Johah vnto Rabfaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstande it well: And speake not to vs in the Jewes tunge, lest the folke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabfaches: Thinke ye, y^e the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you? Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vpon the wall? that they be not compelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabfaches stood stiff, & cried with a loude voyce in the Jewes tūge, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greake kinge of the Assirians geuerth you warnynge. Thus saith the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceane you, for he shal not be able to deliuer you. Moreover, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saith: The LORDE with out doute sha! defende vs, & shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assirians, beleue him not. But thus saith the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, encline to me: Somaye euery man enioye his vynyardes and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cistern: vnto the tyme that I come myself, & bringe you in to a londe, y^e is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both so wren with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceane you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal deliuer vs.

D Night the goddes of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians: Wher is the God of hemath & Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharna:im? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddes of the lōdes, hath deliuered their countre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde deliuer Jerusalem from my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde their tūges, and answered not one word: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answer. So came Eliachim Elihias sonne the presidēt, Sobna the scribe, and Joah Asapha sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, & tolde him the wordes of Rabfaches.

The xxxvij. Chap. Ho. xij.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

When Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, & put on a sack cloth, & went in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the Presidēt, Sobna the scribe wth the eldest priestes cloothed in sack, vnto the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, & they sayde vnto him: Thus saith Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plague & of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabfaches, whom his lorde y^e kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie & blasphemethe lyuynge God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE y^e God hath herde right well. And therefore lift vp y^e prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saith the LORDE: Be not a frayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assirias seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I destroye him with the swerde. Now when Rabfaches returned, he founde y^e kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstande, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, y^e Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde y^e, he sent othe messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceane the, in whom thou hopest, & sayest: Ierusalē shal not be geue in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, & happest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gentiles (whom my progenitours cōquered) deliuered at any tyme thorow their goddes? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, & the childre of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of hemath, & the kinge of Arphad, & the kinge of the citie Sephar-naim, Ena and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued y^e lettre of the messaungers, & red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, & opened the lettre before y^e LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, then God of Israel, which dwellest vpon Cherubin. Thou art the God, that only is God of all the king-domes of the worlde, for thou only hast created haue z earth. Encline thine eare LORDE z cōsidre, open thine eyes (o LORDE,) z se, and pōndre all the wordes of Sennacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blasphemethe, the luyngge God. It is true, (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria haue cōquered all king-domes z londes, z cast their goddes in the fy-

re. For with stōdunge these were no goddes but the workes of mens handes, of wedd or stone, therefore haue they destroyed them. De-liuer vs then (o LORDE) our God, from the handes of Sennacherib, y' all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art y'
LORDE.

D Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saith y' LOR-DE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touching Sennacherib, this is the answer, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge hym: Despised art thou, z mocked (o daughter of Sion, he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Jerusalem. But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasp:med? And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, z exalted thy proude lokes z euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruantes hast blas-phemed the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thyself: I couer the hiemountaynes, z sy-des of Libanus with my hoismen. And there wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees z the fayrest fyre trees. I wil vp into the heyth of it z into the chesest of his tymbre woddes.
If there be no water, I wil graue z drynke.
And as for waters of defence, I shal due them vp with the fete of myne hoosie. Yee (saist thou) hast thou not herde, what I haue taken in hande, z brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waite, destroie, z bunge the stronge citie vnto heapes of stones. For their inhabitours shal be like lame men, brought in feare z confounded.
They shal be like the grasse z grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpo house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be grewe vp.

E I knowe thy wayes, thy goinge forth z thy cōmyngge home, yee z thy madnesse agaynst me. Therefore thy furiousnesse agaynst me, z thy pryde is come before me. I wil put a ryng in y' nose, z a buble byt in the chawes
of the, z turne the aboute, eue the same waye thou camest. I wil geue the also this token (o Ezechias) this yere shalt thou eate that is kepte in store, z the next yere soch as groweth of himself, and in the thirde yere ye shal sowe and reape, yee ye shal plante vyn-yardes, and emoye the frutes therof.

And soch of the house of Juda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remnaunt shal take rote beneth, z bunge forth frute a-bone. For the escaped shal go out of Jerusalē, z the remnaunt from the mount Sion.
And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoosies bunge to passe. Therefore thus sa-ieth the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the citie, and shal shute no arrowe in to it, there shall ne shilde hurte it, nether shal they grane about it. The same waye that he came, shal he retorne, and not come at this citie, saith the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the citie (saith he) for myne owne, z for my ser-uaunt Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth, and slew of the Assirians hoosie, an cxxxv. thousande. And when men arese vp early (at Jerusalē:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Nine. Afterwarde it chaunfed, as he prayed in the Tēple of Nes-rah his god, that Adramalech and Sarazer his owne sonnes slew him with the swear-de, and fled into the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after hym.

The xxxv. Chapter.

Not longe afore this, was Ezechias dead sick: And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaunderth the LORDE: Set thyne house in ordie, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face to-warde the wall, z prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I haue walked before the in treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue done the thinge that is pleasaunt to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. The sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy father sendeth y' this woide: I haue herde thy prayer, and considred thy teares: beholde, I will put xv. yeres mo vnto thy life, and deli-uer the and the citie also, from the hande of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the cite. And take the this token of the LORDE, y' he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will retorne the shadowe of Ahas Diall, y'
now is layed out with the Sonne, and bün-ge it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgeuyngge, which Ezechias kin-ge of Juda wrote, when he had beneficte, z was recovered.

The prophet Esay.

C I thought I shulde haue gone to the gates of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer see man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde.

Myne age is folden vp together and taken awaye from me, like a sheperdes cotage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weener cutteth of his webb.

Why! I was yet takinge my rest, he hewed me of, & made an ende of me in one daie.

Iob 4.d

I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he brusshed my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daie.

Then chattered I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a dove.

I lift vp myne eyes into y^e hight: LORDE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou suertie for me.

D What shal I speake or say, et hat he maye this doo: y^e I maye lyue out all my yeares, yee in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE), men must lyue in bytternesse, & all my life must I passe ouer therein: For thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wilbe wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my cōuersacion hath so pleased y^e, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my synnes behynde thy backe.

O deliuer vs (LORDE) and we wil synge prayses in thy house, all the dayes of oure life.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the sore, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thinge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

At the same tyme Merodach Baladā, Baladās sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he understode, how that he had bene sick, & was recovered agayne. And Ezechias was glad therof, & shewed them the comodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyes & rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboordes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, & so the-row out all his kingdome, but he let them see it.

Then came Esay the piophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue y^e men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre countre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answerde: All that is in myne house, haue they sene: and there is no thinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Under stande the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Be holde, the tyme wil come, that enery thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy progenytours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daie, shalbe caried to Babilon, and nothinge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shalbe caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne counsell, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulness in my tyme.

A voyce crieth: Prepare y^e waye for the LORDE in the wylbernesse, make straight y^e path for oure God in the deserte. Let all valles be exalted, and eucry mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne felde. beholde, the LORDE, even the almightie sha come wth power, & beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shal fe de his flock like an hirdman. He shal gather the lambes together with his arme, and carie them in his bosome, & shal kindly untreate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heaven with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of y^e world in thre fingers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? Who hath re-fourned the mynde of the LORDE? Or who is of his counsell to teach him? Ar whom hath he asked counsell, to make him understoode, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment: to teach him science, and to instructe him in the waye of understoonding? Beholde, all people are in cōpariſon of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge y^e the balauce weyeth. Beholde, y^e Isles are in cōpariſon of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficient to minstre fyre for his offringe, and all the beastes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in cōpariſon of him, are rekened, as nothings, yee sayne vanite and emptynesse.

C To whom then will ye liken God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? Shal the carner make him a carued ymage? and shal the goldsmith coner him with golde, or cast him in to a fourme of syluer plates? Moreover shal the ymage maker (y^e the pooreman which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to see vpon al) sette out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, y^e moueth not? Knowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnynge? haue ye not bene en-fourned of this, sence the foundation of y^e earth was layde: That he sytteth vpon the Circie of the worlde, and that all the inhabitants of the worlde are in cōpariſon of him, but as greshoppers: That he spredeth out the heauens as a coneringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in: That he bringeth princes to nothings, and the iudges of the earth to dust: so that they be not planted nor sowne a tayne, neither their stocke rooted awayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither & fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

D To whom new wil ye liken me, & whom shal I be like, saith the holyone? Lift vp youre eyes an hie, and confidre. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. For there is nothings hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. How maye then Jacob thinke, or how maye Israel saye: My wayes are hyd from the LORDE, and my God knoweth not of my iudgmentes. Knowest thou not, or hast thou not herde, that the everlastinge God, the LORDE which made all the corners of the earth, is nether weery nor faynt, and that his wisdom can not be comprehended: but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the faynte? Childien are weery and faynt, and the strongest men fall: But vnto them that haue the LORDE before their eyes, shal strength be increased, Angles wynges shal growe vpon them: When they runne, they shal not fall: and when they go, they shal not be weery.

Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the Kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the ground with his swerde, and scatre them li ke stulle with his bowe? Thus saith the LORD the holy one of Israel youre redeemer: For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bunge all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that beest them of their shippes: Euen I the LORD youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am youre kinge. Moreover, thus saith the LORD (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, and a fote path in the mightie waters: which bunge forth the charrettes and horses, the hooft and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer rise, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and regarden nothinge that is past. Therefore beholde, I shal make a new thinge, and shortly shal it apere: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agayne.

 dernesse, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drinke to my peepie, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Jacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vnlust toward me, o Israel. Thou gauest me not thy yonge beasies for burnt offringes, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thy money, nether pourest the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable w: to the in offrings, nether greuous in Incense.

But thou hast ladē me with thy synnes, and weered me with thy vngodlynes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selves sake do awaye thine offences, & forget thy synnes: so that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembraunce (for we will reason together) & shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. Thy first father offended sore, and thy rulers haue synned agaynst me. Therefore I ether suspended, or slewe the chiefe pynces: I dyd curse Jacob, and gaue Israel into reprobation.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO heare now, o Jacob my seruante, and Israel whom I haue chose. For thus saith the LORDE, that made the, fashioned the, and helped he, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not a frayde (o Jacob my seruante,) thou righteous, whom I haue chosen. For I shal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the churste. I shal poure my spierte vpon thi sede, and myne encrease vpo thy stocke. They shal growe together, like as the grasse, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Jacob. The thirde shal subscribe with his honde vnto y LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

Moreover, thus hath the LORDE spokē: euen the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, y LORDE of hostes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be likened vnto me. Let him tell you forth plainly thiges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hyther to, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their labour lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can nether sener vnderstonde) they shal be confounded. Who shulde now make a god, or fashion an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the fellowshipe of the must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The smith taketh yron, and tempreth it with hore coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, & maketh it w alithe strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thirstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh methetymbre, and spiedeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, & squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and acordinge to the beutie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

Moreover, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: he bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Syre trees which he planted himself, & soch as the rayns hath swelled, which woddes scructh for me to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himself with all: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honoure it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One pece he burneth in the fyre, with another he roseth flesh, that he maye eate roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himse'f, and saith: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippinge it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

Yet men nether conside ner vnderstonde, because their eyes are stopped, that they cannot see: and their hertes, that they can not perceauē. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstodinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēd one pece in the fyre, I haue baked bred w y, coles there of, I haue rested flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten peece of woodd? The keepinge of dust, and foolishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not Jerre?

Consider this (o Jacob and Israel) for thou art my seruant. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloude, and thy synnes as the mist. Turne y agayne vnto me, & I will deliuer y.

Be glad ye heauens, when the LORDE hath made, let all y is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & woddes, with all the trees that are in yeu: for y LORDE shal redeme Jacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. So thus saith the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that hath ioyned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I destroye the tokens of wiches, and make the Soothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them backward, and make their cunningge foolishnesse.

But I see vpon the purpose of my seruantes, and fulfille the counsel of my messengers. I saye to Ierusalem: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repaire their decayed places. I saye to the groundes: bedrie. And I doe vp thy water floudes. I saye to Cyrus: thou art myn hyd man, so that he shal fulfill all thinges after my will. I saye to Ierusalem: be thou buylded, and to the temple: be thou fast grounded.

The xlv. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE vnto Cyrus his anoynted, whom he ledech by y right hōde: that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyrdle of thines, y they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their doores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straigh. I shal breake the brasen doores, & burst the yron barres. I shal geue the the hyd treasure, & the thinge which is secretly kept: that thou mayest knowe, y the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Jacob my seruant sake, & for Israel my chesen. For I called the by y name, and ordened the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, before whom there is none other, for wout me there is no God. I haue prepared the, or euer thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the risyn-

It is I y created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: yee euen I the LORDE do all these thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloude shal rayne righte ousines. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth heath, and therby shal righte ousnes flourish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

Wo be vnto him that chydeth w his ma. ter, the pot sherde with the potter. Saith y claye to the potter: What makest thou? or, y worke serueth for nothinge? Wo be vnto him, y saith to his father: why begettest thou? And to his mother: why bearest thou? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one & maker of Israel: Are me of thinges for to come, concernyng my sonnes: and put me in remembrance, as touchyng the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created man vpon it. With my hondes haue I spied forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste thereof. I shal wake him vp with righte ousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buyld my cite, & let out my prisoners: & that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egypte, the marchautes of the Mozyans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shal be thyne, they shal selo we the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (wout whō there is none other God) shal be with the. O he w pie founde art thou o God, thou God & Sauoure of Israel: Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all yet that be worke masters of erreures (that is worshippers of Idols) But Israel shal be saned in the LORDE, which is the euer lastyng saluaciō: They shal not come to shamenor confucion, worlde without ende.

So thus sayeth the LORDE: euen he that created heauen, the God y made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly, nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the seer of Jacob: seke me. I am the LORDE, which when I speake, declare the thinge that is righte ous and true. Let the be gathered & cemetogether, let the drawe nye hyther, y are escaped of the people: haue they eny vnderstandinge, that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that can not helpe them? Let men diuine nye, let them come hither, and aske counsell one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, ever since the begynnynge? haue not I yf LORDE done it: without whom there is none other God: the true God and sauiour, and there is els none but I: And therefore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saved, for I am God, and there is els none. I sweare by myself: out of my mouth cometh yf worde of rightuousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all kynes shal bowe vnto me, and all tungen shal sweare by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is my rightuousnes and strength. To him shal men come: but all they that thinke scorne of him, shalbe confounded. And the whole siede of Israel shalbe iustified, and praysed in yf LORDE

The xlvj. Chapter.

Nevertheles Bel shal fall, and Labo shal be broken: whose ymages are a burthen for the beastes and catell, to overlade them, and to make them wery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therefore must they go in to captiuyte.

Hearken vnto me, o house of Jacob, and all ye that remayne yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue borne from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from your birth, till ye were growen: I which shall beare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I will also nourish you, beare you and saue you. Whom will ye make me like, in fashion or ymage, that I maye be like him? Xe foles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hyre a goldsmith to make a god of it, that men maye knele downe and worshippe it. Yet must he be taken on mens shulders and borne, and set in his place, that he maye stonde and not moue. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answer: and deliuereth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

Considere this well, and be ashamed, Go in to youre owne selues (O ye runnagates). Remembre the thinges which are past, since the begynnynge of the worlde: that I am iust, and that there is els no God, yee and yf there is nothinge like vnto me. In the begynnynge of a thinge, I shewe the ende therof: and I tel before thinges that are not yet come to passe. With one worde is my deuysce

Hear me, o ye that are of an hie stomack, but farre from rightuousnesse. I shal bringe forth my rightuousnesse, It is not farre, and my health shal not tarry longe awaye. I will laye health in Sio, and geue Israel my glory.

The xlvij. Chapter.

But as for the (O daughter, thou virgin Babilon) thou shalt sit in the dust. Thou shalt sit vpon the groude, and not in a chaire (o thou mayden of Chaldea). Thou shalt nomore be called tender, and pleasaunt. Thou shalt bringe forth the querne, and grynede meel, put downe thy stomacher, make bare thy knees, and shalt wade thorow the water ryuers. Thy shame shalbe discovered, and thy prynces shal be sene. For I wil auenge me of the, and no man shal let me: saith our redemer, which is called the LORDE of hostes, the holy one of Israel.

Syt still, holde thy tounge, and get thee in to some darcke corner (O daughter Caldea) for thou shalt nomore be called lady of kyngdomes. I was so wroth with my people, yf I punished myne inheritaunce, and gaue them in to thy power. Neuertheles, thou shewdest them no mercy, but even the very aged men of the, didest thou oppresse right sore with thy yock, and thou thoughtest thus: I shalbe lady for ever. And besyde all that, thou hast not regarded these thinges, nether cast, what shulde come after.

Hear now therefore, thou wilful, that syttest so carelesse, and speakest thus in thine heart: I am alone, and without me is there none: I shal neuer be wydow, ner desolate agayne. And yet both these thinges shal come to the vpon one daye in the twinklinge of an eye: Namely, wyddowhead, and desolation. They shal mightely fall vpon the, for yf multitude of thy witches, and for the greate heape of thy conuicers. For thou hast comforted thy self in thy disceatfulness, and hast sayde: I am alone, and without me is there none. Therefore shal trouble come vpon yf, and thou shalt not knowe, from whence it shal arise. Liyche these shal fall vpon yf, which thou shalt not be able to put of. And sodane misery shal come vpon the, or ever thou be aware.

E Now go to thy coniuers, and to the multitude of thy witches, (whom thou hast bene acquainted withal from thy youth) yf they maye helpe the, or strengthē the. Thou hast hither to had many counsels of them, so let the heauengasers & the beholders of starres, come on now and deliuer the: yee and let the shewe, when these new thinges shall come vpon the. Beholde, they shalbe like strawe, which yf it be kindled with fyre, no man maye rydde it for the vehemence of the flame: And yet it geueth no zynders to warme a mā by, ner cleare fyre to syt by. Euen so shal they be vnto the, whom thou hast used & occupied from thy youth. Euery one shal shewe yf his erroneous waye, yet shall none of them defende the.

The prophete Esay.

cob agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne. In whose sight I am greare, which also is my LORDE, my God and my strenght. Let it be but a smal thinge, that thou art my seruant, to set vp the kinredde of Jacob, & to restore the destruction of Israel: yf I make the not also the light of the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my healeth vnto the ende of the worlde.

Moreover thus saith the LORDE the avenge and holy one of Israel, because of the abhorringe and despisinge amonge the Gentiles, concerninge the seruant of all them yf beare rule: Kynges and prynces shal se, and arise and worshippe, because of the LORDE that he is faithfull: and because of the holy one of Israel, which hath chosen the.

And thus saith the LORDE: In the tyme apoynted wil I be present with the, And in the houre of healeth wil I helpe the, & deliuer the. I wil make the a pledge for y^e people, so y^e thou shalt helpe vpon the earth agayne, and chalenge agayne the scattered heretages: That thou mayest saye to y^e prisoners: go forth, & to them that are in darknesse: come vnto the light, that they maye se in the hie wayes, & get their lynynge in all places.

There shal nether hunger nor thurst, heate nor Sonne hurte them. For he that fauoureth them, shal lede them, and gethem driue of the spunge welles. I wil make wayes vpon all my mountaynes, and my fore pathes shal be exalted. And beholde, they shal come from furre: so, some from the north and west, some from the south. Reioyse ye heauens, and synge prayses thou earth: Talke of ioye ye hilles, for God wil cōferte his people, & haue mercy vpon his, y^e be in trouble.

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken me, and the LORDE hath forgottē me. Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, and the sonne whō she hath borne? And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the. Beholde, I haue written the vp vpon my hondes, thy walles are euery in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the up agayne: and they that made the waste, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them to gether, and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE) thou shalt put thumall vpon the, as an apparell, and gyrdethē to the, as a bryde doth hir Jewels. As for thy londe that lieth desolate, waisted & destroyed: it shal be to narrow for the, that shal dwell in it. And they y^e wolde deuoure the, shall be farre awaye. Then the childe whō y^e bare shall bringe forth vnto y^e, shal saye in thine eare: this place is to narrow, sit nyet together, y^e I maye haue rowme. Then shalt thou thinke by thy self: Who hath begottē me these? seinge I am bare & alse, a captyue & an outcast: And who hath noursed the vp for me? I am desolate & alone, but frō whēce come these?

And therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde to the Gentiles, and set vp my token to the people. They shal bunge the thy sonnes in their lappes, & carie thy dochters vnto y^e vpon their shulders. For kynges shal be thy noursinge fathers, and Quenes shal be thy noursinge mothers. They shal fall before the wth their faces flat vpon the earth, and licē vp the dust of thy fete: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. And who so putte his trust in me, shal not be confounded. Who spoyleth the gĩaunte of his pray: or who taketh the prisoner from the mightie? And therefore thus saith the LORDE: The prisoners shal be taken from the gĩaunte, and the spoyle deliuered from the violēte: for I wil mainteyne thy cause agaynst thine aduersaries, and saue thy sonnes. And wil fede thine enemies with their owne fleshe, and make the drinke of their owne bloude, as of swete wyne. And all flesh shal knowe (o Jacob) that I am the LORDE thy Sauiour, and stronge auenger. Chap. l.

Thus saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of y^e mothers denoicement, that I sent vnto her: or who is the vsurer, to whō I solde you? Beholde, for youre owne offences are ye solde: & because of youre transgression, is youre mother so: sate. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came: & when I called, no man gaue me answer. Was my hōde cleane synnē of, that it might not helpe: or, had I not power to deliuer: lo, at a worde I driue vp the see, & of water floudes I make due lōde: so y^e for want of water, the fish corrupte and die of thirst. As for heauen, I clooth it with darknesse, and put a sack vpon it.

The LORDE God hath geuē me a weller- ned tūge, so that I can conforte them which are troubled, yee & y^e in due season. He waiked myne eare up by tymes in y^e mornynge (as y^e scolemasters do) y^e I might herke. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therefore can I not saye naie, ner wth drawe myself, but I offre my backe vnto y^e synners, and my che- es to the nyppers. I turne not my face frō shame and spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therefore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flynt stone, for I am sure, that I shal not come to confusion. Myne advocate speaketh for me, who wil then go with me to lawe? Let vs stand one agaynst another: yf there be eny that wil reason with me, let him come here forth to me. Therefore who so feareth the LORDE and obge you, let him heare the voyce of his seruauit. Who so walketh in darkness, and no light shyneth vpon him, let him hope in the LORDE, and holde him by his God. But take hede, ye haue all kindled a fyre, and gyrded youre selues with the flame: ye walke in the glisteringe of youre owne fyre, and in the flame that ye haue kindled. This cometh vnto you from my honde, namely, yf ye shal slepe in sorowe.

Erken vnto me, ye that holde of righteousness, ye that seek the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the grane wherout ye are digged. Considre Abraham youre father, and Sara that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, and increased him: how the LORDE comforted Sis, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a Paradise, and hir wilderness as the garden of the LORDE. Myrrh and ioye was there, thankes geuynge and yf voyce of prayse. Haue respect vnto me then (o my people) and laye thine eare to me: for a lawe, and an ordinance shal go forth from me, to lighten the Gentiles. It is hard by, that my health and my righteousness shal go forth, and the people shal be ordred with myne arme.

The Blondes (that is yf Gentiles) shal hope in me, and put their trust in myne arme. Lift vp youre eyes toward heauē, and loke vpon the earth beneath. For the heauens shal vanish awaye like smoke, and the earth shal ceare like a clothe, and they that dwel therein, shal perish in like maner. But my health endureth for ever, and my righteousness shall not cease. Therefore herken vnto me, ye yf haue pleasure in righteousness, thou people that bearest my lawe in thine herte. Feare not the curse of men, be not a frayde of their blasphemies and reuylinges: for wormes and mothes shal eat the vp like clothe and woll. Awake, Awake, and stonde vpon Jerusalem, thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast dronke out the cuppe of his wiath: thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombunge cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast nonshed. Both these thynges are happened vnto the, but who is sory for it? Yee, destruction, waistinge, hunger and swerde: but who hath comforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at yf heade of euery strete like a catē venyson, and are ful of yf terrible wiath of yf LORDE, and pynishment of thy God. And therefore thou miserable and dronke (howbeit not wth wyne) heare this: Thus saith thy LORDE: thy LORDE and God, yf defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take yf slombunge cuppe out of thy hōde, enē yf cuppe wth the dregges of my wiath: yf fro hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, and wil put it in their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: makethy bodye eanē with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

The liij. Chapter.

21 Up Sion vp, take thy strength vnto the: put on thine honest rayment o' Ierusalē, thou citie of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vncleane person come in the. Shal the frō the dust arise & stonde vp, o' Ierusalē. Pluck out thy neck from the bōde, o' thou captiue daughter Sion. For thus saith the LORDE: Ye are solde for naught, therfore shal ye be redeemed also without eny money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: My people wēte downe afore tyme into Egipte, there to be strangers. A fferwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse the, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith y' LORDE) y' my people is frely caried awaye, & brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name euer still blasphemed: saith the LORDE. But y' my people maye knowe my name, I my self will speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how beautifull are the feete of the Embassitoure, y' bringet' the message frō the mounteyne, & proclameth peace: y' bugeth the good tydings, & preacheth health, & saith vnto Sion: Thy God is the Kinge. Thy watchmen shal lift vp their voyce, w' loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal se him present, whē the LORDE shal come agayne to Sion.

Be glad, o' thou desolate Ierusalē, & reioyce together: for the LORDE will cōfōrt his people, he wil delyuer Ierusalē. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme, & shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gentiles, & all the endes of the earth shal se the sauyng health of oure God. Awaye, Awaye, get you out frō hence, & touch no vncleane thinge. Go out from amongesoch, And be cleane, yet hatteare the vessell of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sediciō, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, & the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruante shal deale wysely, therfore shal he be magnified, exalted & greatly honoured. Like as y' multitude shal wō die vpon him, because his face shal be so deformed & not as a mans face, & his beutie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gentiles loke vnto him, & y' kinges shal shut their mouthes before him. For they y' haue not benetolde of him, shal se him: and they y' herde nothinge of him, shal beholde him.

before the LORDE like as a brāich, & as a rote in a drie ground. he shal haue nether beuty ner fauoure. When we loke vpon him, there shal be no saymesse: we shal haue no lust vnto him. he shal be the most symple & despised of all, which yet hath good experience of sorowes & infirmities. We shal reken him so symple & so vyle, that we shal hyde oure faces frō him. Howbeit (of a treuth) he only taketh awaye oure infirmite, & beareth oure payne: Yet we shal indge him, as though he were plaged and cast downe of God: where as he (not with stōdinge) shal be wounded for oure offences, & smytten for oure wickednes. For the payne of so' punysshment shal be layde vpon him, & w' his stripes shal we be healed.

As for vs, we go all astraye (like shepe), e- uery one turneth his owne waye. But thoro' him, the LORDE pardoneth all o' synnes. he shal be payned & troubled, & shal not open his mouth. he shal be led as a shepe to be slayne, yet shal he be as still as a lambe before the shearer, & not open his mouth. he shal be had awaye, his cause not herde, & w' out eny iudgment: Whose generacion yet no man maye nombr, when he shal be cut of frō the grounde of the lyvinge: Which punysshment shal go vpon him, for the transgressi- on of my people. his grave shal be geue him with the cōdemned, & his crucifieng with the reues, Where as he dyd neuer violence ner vnright, nether hath there bene eny dis- ceatfulnesse in his mouth.

Yet hath it pleased y' LORDE to smyte him with infirmite, that when he had made his soule an offeringe for synne, he might se a lō- ge lastinge sede. And this device of the LORDE shal prospere in his honde. With trauayle and labour of his soule, shal he opeayne greate riches. My righteous seruante shal with his wysdome iustifie & delyuer the multi- tude, for he shal beare awaye their synnes. Therefore wil I geue him the multitude for his parte, & he shal deuoyde the strōge spoyle because he shal geue ouer his soule to death, & shal be rekened amonge the transgressours, which neuertheles shal take awaye y' synnes of the multitude, and make intercession for the myssdoers.

Es: for thou shalt breake out on the right syde and on the left, & thy side shall haue y^e Gētiles in possession, and dwell in the desolate cities. Feare not, for thou shalt not be confounded: Be not ashamed, for thou shalt not come to confusion. Yet thou shalt forget the shame off thy youth, and shalt not remember the dishonoure of thy wedewheade. For he that made the, shall be thy LORDE & husbande (whose name is the LORDE of hostes) & thine avenger shall be euen the holy one off Israel, the LORDE of the whele worlde. For the LORDE shall call the, beinge as a desolate forlorn woman, and as a yonge wife that hath broken hir wedlocke: saith thy God.

B A litle while haue I forsaken the, but wth greate mercifulnes shall I take the vp vnto me. Whē I was angrie, I hid my face from the for a litle season, but thow everlastinge goodnesse shall I pardon the, saith the LORDE thine avenger. And this must be vnto me, as the water of Noe: For like as I haue sworne y^e I wil not bunge the water off Noe any more vpoⁿ the worlde: So haue I sworne, y^e I wil neuer be angrie wth the, ner reprove the: The mountaynes shall remoue, & the hilles shall fall downe: but my louynge kyndnesse shall not moue, and the bonde off my peace shall not fall downe fro^m y^e, saith y^e LORDE thy mercifull leuer.

C Beholde, thou poore, vexed & despised: I wil make thy walles of precious stones, & y^e foundacioⁿ of Saphires, thy wyndowes off Cristall, thy gates of fyne cleare stone, & y^e borders of pleasaunt stones. Thy childe shall all be taught of God, & I wil geue the plentyousnes of peace. In righteuousnes shalt thou be grounde, & be farre fro^m oppiession: for the which thou nedest not be afraied, neither for hynderaunce, for it shall not come nye the. Beholde, y^e alcaunt y^e was farre fro^m the, shall dwell wth the: & he y^e was somtyme a stranger vnto the, shall be ioyned wth the: Beholde, I make the smych y^e bloweth the celes in the fyre, & he maketh a weapon after his handy worke. I make also the waister to destroye: but all the weapons y^e are made agaynst the, shall not prosper. And as for all tungen, y^e shall resiste the in iudgmet. thou shalt overcome the, & cōdemne them. This is the heritage of the LORDES seruautes, & the righteuousnes that they shall haue of me, saith the LORDE.

Enclyne youre eares, & come vnto me, take hede & youre soule shall lyue. For I will make an everlastinge cōuenant with you, euē the sure mercies of Dauid.

B Beholde, I shall geue him for a witnesse amonge y^e felke, for a prynce & caprayne vnto the people. For thou shalt call an vnknown people: & a people that had no knowlege of the, shall runne vnto the: because off the LORDE thy God, y^e holy one of Israel, which gloufieth the. Seeke the LORDE while he maye be founde, call vpoⁿ him while he is nye. Let the vngodly man forsake his wayes, and the vnrighteous his ymaginaciōs, & turne agayne vnto the LORDE, so shall he be mercifull vnto him: and to oure God, for he is redy to forgene.

C For thus saith the LORDE: My thoughtes are not youre thoughtes, & youre wayes are not my wayes: But as farre as the heauens are hyer then the earth, so farre do my waies excede yours, & my thoughtes yours. And like as the rayne & snowe cōmeth downe from heauē, & returneth not thither agayne, but watereth the earth, maketh it frutefull & grene, that it maye geue come & breade vnto the sower: So the worde also that cometh out of my mouth, shall not turne agayne voyde vnto me, but shall accomplishe my wil & prosper in the thinge, wherto I sende it. And so shall ye go forth wth ioye, & be led with peace. The mountaynes and hilles shall synge with you for ioye, and all the trees of the felde shall clappe their hondes. For thornes, there shall growe Syne tries, & y^e Myrre tre in the steade of bieres. And this shall be done to the prayse of the LORDE, & for an everlastinge toke, that shall not be taken awaye.

Then shall not the straunger, which cleaueth to the LORDE, saye: Alas the LORDE hath shuenie cleane out from his people. Neither shall the gelded man saye: lo, I am a drie tre. Vnto them wil I geue in my heusholde and with in my walles, a better heretage z name:
thē yf they had bene called sonnes z daughters. I wil geue them an euerlastinge name, that shall not perishe. Agayne, he saierh vnto the straungers that are disposed to sticketo
the LORDE, to serue him, z to loue his name:
That they shalbe no bōde mē. And all they,
which kepe thē selues, that they vnhalowe not the Sabbath, namely: that they fulfill my couenaunt: Them wil I bringeto my holy mountayne, z make thē ioyfull in my house of prayer. Their burnt offrings and sacrifices shalbe accepted vpon myne altar. for my house shalbe an house of prayer for all people.

Thus saierh the LORDE God which ga-thereth together the scattered of Israel: I wil bringe yet another cōgregacion to him. All the bestes of the felde, z all the bestes of yf wood, shal come to deuoure hi. For his watch men are all blinde, they haue altogether
no vnderstandinge, they are all comme dogges, not beinge able to barcke, they are slepery: slothful are they, z lie snoitinge: they are shamelesse dogges, yf be neuer satisfied. The sheperdes also in like maner haue no vnderstandinge, but every man turneth his owne
waye, every one after his owne couetousnes, wth all his power. Come (saye they) I wil fetch wyne, so shal we fyll oure selues, that we maye be drunken. And do tomorrow, like as to daye, yee and moch more.

The LVII. Chapter.

In the meane season yf righteous perissheth, z no mā regardeth it in his hert. Good godly people are taken awaye. z no mā cōsidreth it. Namely: that the righteous is conuayed awaye thorow yf wicked: that he himself might be in rest, lie quietly vpon his bed, z lyue after his owne pleasure. Come hither therfore ye charmers children, ye sonnes of the aduoutre z the whore: Wherintake ye youre pleasure? Vpon whom gape ye with y^o mouth, z bleare out y^o tonge? Are ye not childre of aduoutry, z a seide of dissimulation? Take youre pleasure vnder the oaks, z vnder all grene trees, the childe beynge slayne in the valleys, z denues of stone.
Thy parte shalbe with the stony rockes by the ryuer: Yee euen these shal be thy parte.
For there thou hast poured meat and drynt-offrings vnto thē. Shulde I ouersee that?
Thou hast made thy bed vpon his mountaynes, thou wentest vp thither, and there hast thou slayne sacrifices. Behynde the dores z postes, hast thou set vp thy remembraunce?

When thou haddest discovered thyself to another then me, when thou wērest downe, z made thy bed wyder (that is) when thou didest carue the certayne of yonder Idols, z louedest their couches, wherethou sawest thē:
Thou wentest straight to kinges with oyle z dyuerse oyntmentes (that is) thou hast sent thy messaungers farre of, and yet art thou fallen in to the pyt therby. Thou hast had trouble for yf multitude of thyne owne way-es, yet saydest thou neuer: I wil leaue of.
Thou thinkest to haue life (or health) of thy self, and therfore thou beluest not that thou art sick. For when wilt thou be abashed or fear, seinge thou hast broken thy promyse, z remembrest not me, nether hast me in thine hert? Thinkest thou, that I also will holde my peace (as a fore tyme) yf thou fearest me not? Yee verely I wil declare yf goodnes z yf worke, but they shal not profit yf. whē thou criest, let yf chosen heape deluyner the. But the wynde shal take them all awaye, z cary thē in to yf ayre. Nevertheless, they yf put their trust in me, shal inheret the lande, and haue
my holy hill in possession.

And therfore thus he saierh: Make redy, make redy, and clense yf strete, take vp what ye can out of the waye, that ledeth to my people. For thus saierh the hie and excellēt, euen he that dwelleth in euerlastingnesse, whose name is the holy one: I dwel hie aboue and in the sanctuary, z with him also, yf is of a cō-trite and hūble spire: yf I maye heale a troubled mynde, and a cōtrite herte. For I chide not euer, z am not wroth wth out ende. But yf blastinge goeth frome, though I make the breath. I am wroth wth hi for his couetousnes z lust, I smyte him, I hyde me, and am an-grie, whē he turneth him self, and foloweth yf byraye of his owne hert. But yf I maye se his right waye agayne, I make him whole,
I cōde him, and restore him vnto them whom he maketh ioyful, z that were sory for him.
I make the frutes of thākesgeuinge. I geue peace vnto them that are farre of, and to them that are nye, saye I the LORDE, that make him whole. But the wicked are like the raginge see, that cā not rest, whose water someth with the myre z grauel. E-uē so yf wicked haue no peace, saierh my God.

their symies. For they seke me dalye, and wil knowe my wayes, euen as it were a people that dyd right, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God. They argue with me concerninge right iudgment, and wil pleate at the lawe with their God. Wherfore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not: we put oure liues to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

Behold, when ye fast, youre lust remaineth still: for ye do no lesse violence to youre betters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to synite him with youre fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that youre voyce might be heard aboue. Thynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a mā shulde chasten himself for a daye, and to wyth his head aboue like an hoke in an hairy cloth, and to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fasting, or a daye that pleaseth the LORD? But this fasting pleaseth not me, till that tyme that thou loose him out of bondage, that is in thy danger: that thou breake the ooth of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. It pleaseth not me, till thou deale thy bread to the hungry, and brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face fro thine owne flesh. Then shal thy light breake forth as the morninge, and thy health flourish right shortly: thy righteousness shal go before the, and the glory of the LORD shal embrace the.

Then yf thou callest, the LORD shal answer the: yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. See yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy syngers, and ceasest from blasphemous talkinge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hungry, and refrefshest the troubled soule: Then shal thy light springe out in the darkenesse, and thy darkenesse shal be as the noone daye. The LORD shal enuer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of thine hert, and fyl thy bones with marry. Thou shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnyng. Then the places that haue euer bene waste, shal be buylded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundation for many kynreds. Thou shalt be called the maker vp of hedges, and the buylder agayne of the waye of the Sabbath.

See yf thou turne thy fete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasaunt, holy and glorious Sabbath of the LORD, where thou shalt be in hond: so that thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. The shalt thou haue thy pleasure in the LORD, which shal carie thee aboue the earth, and seethe the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the LORDES owne mouth hath so promised.

The LIX. Chap.

Behold, the LORDES honde is not so shortened that it can not helpe, nether is his eare so stopped that it maye not heare. But yf mysdoedes haue separated you from the LORD, and yf symies hyde his face from you, that he heareth you not. For yf hondes are defyled with bloude, and yf syngers be vnrightheousnesse: No lippes speake lesynges, and yf tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteousnes, and no mā iudgeth truly. Every man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, conceaunth weerynesse, and bryngeth forth euil. They brede cockatrice egges, and weene the spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon the, there cometh vp a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, and they maye not couer the with their labours. Their beddes are of dedes of wickednes, and the worke of robbery is in their hondes. Their fete runne to euill, and they make haist to shed innocent bloude. Their counsels are wicked counsels, harme and destrucciō are in their wayes. But the waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equitye, their wayes are so croked, that who so euer goeth therin, knoweth nothinge of peace.

And this is the cause that equite is so farre from vs, and that righteousnes cometh not nye vs. We loke for light, lo, it is darkenesse: for the morninge shyne, se, we walke in the darke. We grope like the blynde vpon the wall, we grope euen as one that hath none eyes. We stembles at the noone daye, as though it were toward night: in the fallinge places, likemen that are half dede. We are all like Beeres, and mourne stil like doves. We loke for equite, but there is none: for health, but it is farre from vs. For the offences are many before the, and the symies testifie agaynst vs. See we must confesse that we offende, and knowlege, that we do amysse: Namely, transgress and dyssemble agaynst the LORD, and fall awaye from the LORD: vsinge presumpcions and trayterous ymaginacions, and castinge false matters in the hertes. And therefore is equite gone asyde, and righteousnes stōbeth farre of: truth is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. See the truth is lade in prison, and he that I will declare the goodnesse of the LORDE, yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greate good y he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, & accordinge to the multitude of his louynge kindnesse. For he sayde: These no doute wil be my people, and no shrekinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. In their troubles he forsoke the not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, delyuered them: Of very loue & kindnesse that he had vnto them, redeemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vpon euery, sence the worlde begane. But after they prouoked him to wrath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemye, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remembred he the olde tyme, of Moses & his people: How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had geuen his holy spere amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had denydd the water before them (wherby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an hourse is led in the playne, that they shulde not stumbe. The spere of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

C Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heauē, and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary & thy glory. How is it, y thy glory, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy louynge kindnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs? Yet art thou o father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure father and redeemer, and thy name is euery lastinge. O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruantes sake y are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possessiō, for oure enemies haue take it in: And we are become, cūen as we were from the begynnynge: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

Thou helpest him that doth right with cherefulnesse, and them that thynke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. We are all as an vncleynethinge, & all oure rightuousnesses are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leafe, for oure synnes carie vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stondeth vp to take holde by the. Therefore hydest thou thy face from vs, and consumest vs, because of oure synnes.

But now o LORDE, thou father of fours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the worke of thy hondes. Be not so fore displeased (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to lōge in thy remembraunce, but conside that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waist, Sion is a wilderness, and Jerusalem a deserte. The prophet Jeremy.

These are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of helchias the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Ben Jamim: when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Juda, in the xij yeare of his kingdome: and so duringe vnto the tyme of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda, and vnto the xi yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda were ended: when Jerusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: Before I fashioned the in thy mothers womb, I dyd knowe the: And ouer thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordered the, to be a prophet vnto the people. The sayde I: Wh LORDE God, I am vnnure, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: For thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and what so ever I commaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wil be with the, to deliuer the, saith the LORDE.

And with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde morouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waile: and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plite. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Jeremy, what seist thou? And I sayde: I see a wakynge rodde. Then sayde y LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to performe it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? And I sayde: I do see a seethinge pot, lookinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

The ij. Chap. Ho. xxiiij.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the north shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For lo, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and euery one shall set his seare in the gates of Jerusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Juda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of those men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto strange goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne bondes.

And therfore gyde vp thy loynes, arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in commaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of the. For beholde, this daye do I make the a stronge fenced citie, an yron pyler, and a wall of stele agaynst y whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Juda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to overcome the: for I am w the, to deliuer the, saith the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Where, the worde of the LORDE commaunded me thus: Go thy waye, crie in the eares of Jerusalem, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilbernesse, in an vntilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. All they that deuoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Jacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saith y LORDE vnto you:

What unfaithfulnesse founde youre fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye frome, fallinge to lighenesse, and beinge so vayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, y broughe vs out of the lode of Egipte: y led vs thorow the wilbernesse, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a deedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. And when I had brought you in to a pleasaunt wel buylde londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the comodities of the same: ye went forth and defyled my londe, & broughe myne heretage to abheminacion.

The prestes the selves saide not once: where is y LORDE? They y haue the lawe in their bondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do seruyce vnto Baal, & folowe such thinges as shall bringe them no profit.

Wherefore I am constrained (saith the LORD) to make my complaynte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cethim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, take diligent hede: and se, whether such thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles themselves deale so falsly & vneruly with their goddes (which yet are no goddes in dede.) But my people hath geuen ouer their hye honour, for a thinge that maye not helpe them.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be afraide, & abashed at such a thinge, saith the LORD. For my people hath done two euils. They haue forsaken me the well of the water of life, and digged them pittes, yee vile and broken pittes, that holde no water. Is Israel a bonde seruaunt, or one of the householde? Why is he then so spoyled? Why do they reare and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? They haue made his loude wayse, his cities are so brent vp, that there is no man dwelling in them. See the children of Toph and Taphanes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God, euer since he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now to do in y^e strete of Egypte? to drinke foule water? Either, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To drinke water of the floude? Thine owne wickednesse shal reprove the, and thy turnyng awaye shal condemne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnderstande, howe enel and hurtful a thinge it is, y^e thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORD God of hostes.

I haue neuer broken thy yocke of olde, & bursten thy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil no more serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hye hilles, & amonge all grene trees: where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good roces. How art thou turned then into a bytter, vnfrutefull, and straunge grape? yee and that so sore: that though thou wast shep the with Vitrus & makest thyself to sauoure with that swete smelling herbe of Bouth: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORD thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. Lo ke vpon thy ne owne waies in the woddes, vallis & denes: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast done. Thou art like a swift Dromedary, that goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Ass, that vseth the wildernes, and that snoffeth and bloweth at his wil. Who can tame the? All they that see the, shal not saye, but synde the in thine owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thyfore from nakednes, and thy throte from thurst, and thinkest thus in thy self: tush, I wil take no sorowe, I wil loue the straunge goddes, & hangge vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the bedde, cometh to shame, euē so is the house of Israel cometo confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and prophetes. For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trouble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs, I shal answer the: Where are now thy goddes, that thou hast made the? byd them stonde vp, and helpe the in the tyme of neede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherefore the wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORD? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. Your owne swerde destroyeth youre prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. If ye be the people of the LORD, then hearken vnto his worde: Am I the become a wildernes vnto the people of Israel? or a loude that hath no lichte? Wherefore saith my people then: we are faile of, and we wil come no more vnto the? Deth a mayden forget hir raimēt, or a bryde hir stomacher? And deth my people forget me so longe? Why boostest thou thy wayes so hye, (to optayne fauoure there the row) when thou hast yet stayned them wth blasphemies?

Vpon thy wynges is founde the bloude of poore and innocent people, and that net in corners and holes only, but openly in all the se places. Yet darrest thou saye: I am gyltesse: Tush, his wiath can not come vpon me. Beholde, I wil reason with y^e, because thou darrest saye: I haue net offended. O howe uel wilt it be for the, to abyde it: when it shal be knowne, how oft thou hast gone backward? For thou shalt be confounded, as wel of Egypte, as of the Assirians: yee thou shalt go thy waye from the, & smyte y^e ne bondes together vpon thy heade. Because the LORD shal bunge that confidence and hope of thine to naught, and thou shalt not prosper with all.

The III. Chapter.

21 D Omonly, when a man putteth awaye his wife, and she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the question is: shulde he resorte vnto her any more after that? Is not this felde then defyled and vnclene? But as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many loners, yet turne agay ne to me, saith the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the streets, and as a murdherer in the wildernes-
se. Thow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

1. 17. 2 This is the cause, that the rayne and euenynge dew hath ceased. Thou hast gotten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me:
O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me from my youth: Wilt thou then put me awaye, and cast me off for ever?
O: wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene from me? Nevertheless, thou speakest such wor-des, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

2 The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Josias the Kinge: Hast thou sene
what that shrekinge Israel hath done? how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, and amonge all chiefe trees, and there played the harlot: hast thou sene also, (when she had done all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? Juda that vnfaichfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shrenkinge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and ga-ue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaichfull sister Juda was not ashamed, but wente backe and played the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lode. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with stones and stockes.

Nevertheless, hir vnfaichfull sister Juda is not turned vnto me agayne with hir whole herte, but faynedly, saith the LORDE.

E And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The bacslyder Israel is more rightuous, the vn-faichfull Juda: and therefore go preach these wordes toward the north, & saye: Thou shrekinge Israel, turne agayne (saith the LORDE), and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saith the LORDE, & I will not allwaye beare displeasure agaynst
the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greate blasphemy: Namely, that thou hast vnfaichfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, & hast made thy self partaker of straun-ge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saith the LOR-DE.

O ye shrekinge children, turne agayne,
saith the LORDE, and I will be married with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amonge you, and bunge you out of Sion: and will gene you hyrdme after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wysdome.
Moreover, when ye be increased and multiplied in the londe, then (saith the LORDE)
there shall nomore boost be made of the arte of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thynke vpon it, nether shall eny man make mencion of it: for from thence forth it shall nether be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

Then shall Jerusalem be called the LOR-DES seate, and all heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDES seate, which shalbe set vp at Jerusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore
the ymaginacion of their owne franwerde herte.

Thē those y be of the house of Juda, shal go vnto the house of Israel: And they shal come together out of the north, in to the same londe that I haue geuen youre fathers.
I haue shewed also, how I toke the vp beinge but a childe, and gaue the a pleasaunt lon-de for thine heretage, yee and a goodly hood-ste of the heithen: and how I commaunded the, that thou shuldest call me father only, and not to shrencke from me.

But like as a woman sayleth hir louer, so are ye vnfaichfull vnto me (o ye house of I- srael) saith the LORDE. And therefore the voyce of the children of Israel was herde on e-uery side, wepinge and waylinge: for they haue defyled their waye, and forgotten God their LORDE.

O ye shrekinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale you re bacturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel stondeth only vpon God oure LORDE.

Confucion hath deuoured oure fathers
laboure from oure yonth vp: yee their shepe
and ballockes, their sonnes and daughters.
So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame conereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure yonth vp vnto this daye haue syn-

The prophet Jeremyn.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhoire the, and go aboute to slaye y. For (me thinke) I heare a noyse, like as it were of a woman trauelinge, or one labouringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the doughter Sion, that casteth out hir aymes, and sworneth, sayenge: Ah wo is me, how sore vexed and faynte is my herte, for them that are slayne?

The V. Chapter.

A Let thow Jerusalem, beholde and se: Sete thow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saith the LORDE) For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceauce: Where as thou (O LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentance: thou hast conected them for amendement, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therefore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so symple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES waye, and iudgements of oure God. Therefore will I go vnto their heades and rulers, and talke with them: yf they knowe the waye of the LORDE, and the iudgements of oure God. But these (in like maner) haue broken the yock, and bursten the bondes in sonder.

B Wherfore a lyon out of the wod shal hurte them, and a wolfe in the euenynge shal destroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurking by their cities, to teare in peces all them, that cometherout. For their offences are many, and their departing awaye is greate.

Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and sworne by them that are no goddes. And albeit they were bounde to me in marriage, yet they felles aduourie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnciently lust they are become like the stoned horse, every man neyeth at his neighbours wife. Shulde I not correct this, saith the LORDE?

Shulde I not be a venged of every people, that is like vnto this? I lynne vp vpon their walles, beate them downe, but destroye them not vterly: cut of their braunches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel

The v. Chap. Ho. xxvi.

and Juda forsaken me, saith the LORDE. They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

Tush, there shall no misfortune come vpon vs, we shall se nether swearde nor hunger. As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it but for wynde, yee there is none of these, which will tell them, that soch thinges shal happen vnto them.

Wherfore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wod, that it maye consume them.

Lo, I will bunge a people vps you from farre, o house of Israel (saith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people who se speach thou knowest not, nether vnderstoddest what they saye.

Their arrows are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eatte vp thy frute & thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy doughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shal eatte vp thy grapes & fyges. As for thy stronge and well fensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shal destroye them with the swearde.

Nevertheles I will not then haue done with you, saith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherfore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answerethem: because, that like as ye haue forsake me, and serued straunge goddes in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye serue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Jacob, & crie it out in Juda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou folish and vndiscrete people.) We haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye heare not.

Fear ye not me, saith the LORDE? Are ye not ashamed, to loke me in the face? which bynde the see with the sonde, so that it can not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the waves therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstinate herte, they are departed and gone awaye fro me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when neede is: which kepeth ever still the harvest for vs yearly.

The VI. Chapter.

Come out of Jerusalem, ye strenge childre of Ben Jamin: blowe vp the trompettes ye Tecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate misery peepeth out from the North.

I will licken the doughter Sion to a sayre and tendre woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shal they pitch rounde aboute her, and eueryone shal fede with his honde. Make battell agaynst her (shal they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the L O R D E of hostes commaunded.

Chew downe hir trees, and set vp bulwarkes agaynst Jerusalem. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a cōdyte aboundeth in water, eue so this cite aboundeth in wickednes. Robbery and vnrightheousnesse is herde in her, for sorow & woundes are euer there in my sight. Amēde the (o Jerusalem) lest I with drawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: & thy londe also, yf no man dwel in it. For thus saith the L O R D E of hostes: The residue of Israel shalbe gathered, as the remnant of grapes.

And therefore turne thine honde agayne in to the basket, like the grape gatherer. But vnto whom shal I speake: whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? Their eares are so uncircumcised, that they maye not heare.

The vi. Chap.

Beholde, they take the worde of God but for a scone, and haue no lust therto. And therefore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE, that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. See the man must be taken prisoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Their houses with their londes and wives shal be turned vnto strangers, whē I stretch out myne hōde vpon the inhabitours of this londe, saith the LORDE. For from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon couetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lies.

And resydeth that, they heale the hurte of my people with sweete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, when there is no peace at all. Therefore they must be ashamed, for they haue committed abheminacion. But how shulde they be ashamed, when they knowe nothinge, neither of shame ner good nurture? And therefore they shal fall amonge the slayne, and in the heure when I shall visit them, they shal be brought downe, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: go in to the stretes, confidre and make inquisition for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and right waye, then go therein, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therein) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therefore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therefore ye Gentiles, and thou congregation shalt knowe, what I haue denyed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, I will cause a plage come vpon this people, enen the frute of their owne ymaginations.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abherted them. Wherefore bringe ye me incense from Saba, & strecte smellinge Calamus from farre countrees? Your burnt offerings displease me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and they shal fall from amonge them the father wth the children, one neghbour shal perish with another.

Morouer thus saith y^e LORDE: Beholde, there shal come a people from the North, & a greate people shal arise from y^e endes of y^e earth, wth bowes & wth dartes shal they be weaponed: It is a rough & fearce people, an vmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpon horses wth a pointed re y^e ba

These are the wordes, that God spake vnto Jeremyn: Sconde vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE, all ye of Iuda, that go in at this doore, to honoure the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel. Amende youre wayes and youre counsels, and I wil let you dwell in this place. reth my name, is a denne of theues: And the se thinges are not done puely, but before myne eyes, saith the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saith the LORDE) and I myself rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answer. And therfore as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and youre fathers. And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brechren the whole sede of Ephraim.

Therfore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt net her generacions, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise will I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Iuda, and without Jerusalem? The children gather stickes, the fathers kyndle the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.

They poure out dunt of fringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: how be it they hurte not me (saith the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therfore thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpon the trees in the felde and all fruce of the londe, & it shal burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saith the LORDE of hostes, the God of Israel: Reheape vp youre burnt offrings with youre sacrifices, & eate y flesh. But when I brought youre fathers out of Egypte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt offrings and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: herken and obeye my voyce, and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue commaunded you, that ye maye prospere.

But they were not obedient, they inclined not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymagynacions and after the motions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egypte, vnto this daye.

Hear the wordes of the LORDE, y^e he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the heithen, and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen: for the heithen are afrayed of soch: See all the customes and lawes of the Gentiles are nothinge, but vanite. They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the worke man, and fashion it with the axe: they cover it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it wth nails and hammers, that it moue not. It stōdeth as stiff as the palmetre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. Be not ye afrayed of soch, for they can do nether good ner euil. But there is none like vnto y^e (o LORDE) thou art greare, and greate is the name of y^e power. Who wolde not feare the? or what kinge of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

B For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye belikened vnto the. They are alltogether vlerued and vnwise. All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beate to plates: and golde from Ophir, a worke y^e is made with the honde of the craftsman & the caiter, clothed with yalow sylc^e and scarlet: enen so is the worke of their wysemen all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyvinge God, and an everlastinge kinge. If he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gentiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddes, it maye well be sayde of the: they are goddes, that made nether heauen ner earth: therefore shal they perish fro the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen. But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdom hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spied out the heavens. At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he dra weth vp y^e cloudes from the vttemost partes of y^e earth: he turneth lighteninge to rayne, and brigeeth forth the wyndes out of their treasures: His wisdom maketh all men fooles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. The vayne craftes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Jacobs porciō is not soch: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaunce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put awaye thy vncleennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhaitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of soch a fastid, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte: Alas, how pane-full are my scourges vnto me: For I cosidre this sorow by my self, & I must suffre it. My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My childien are gone fro me, ad can no where be founde. Now haue I none to spiede out my tente, or to see vp my hanginges. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with the ir catell, & all are scatred abroad. Beholde, the noyse is harde at hende, and greate sebi- ciō out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wilderness, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. Now I knowe (o LORDE) that is not in mas power to ordie his owne wales, or to rule his owne steppes & goinges. Therefore chastē thou vs (o LORDE) but with fano- ure, and not in thy wrath, bunge vs not vtterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gentiles, that knowe y^e not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Jacob, and haue ro- ted out his glory.

ne olyuetre, a sayre one, a futefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary re-poire off the abroad, he will burne the vp, and destroie thy braunches. For the LORDE off hoostes that plâced the, hath deuysed a pla-ge for the (o thou house of Israel & Juda) for y cruel that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wraath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, and understonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginacions. But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to beslayne: not knowin-

the lyuynge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therefore I will beset the now (o LORDE of hoostes) thou righteous iudge, thou that cryest the reynes and the hertes:
let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therefore spaketh thus of the citisens of Ano-thor, that sought to slaye me, sayenge: Preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde,
I will v: set you. Your yonge mē shal perish with the swearde, y^e sonnes and youre dou-ghters shal vterly dye of hunger, se that no ne shal remayne. For vpon the citisens off Anathor wil I bunge a plage, and the years of their visitacion.

The XII. Chapter.

O LORDE, thou art more righteous,
then that I shulde dispute with the:
Nevertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. How happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous?
and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offēde and lyue in wickednesse? Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost moch off the, yet doest thou not punyssh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, & proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house, and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therein?

The catell and the byrdes are gone, yet saye they: cusch, God will not destroye vs vtterly.

The prophet Jeremy.

Being thou art weary in runnyng with the fore men, how wilt thou then runne wth horses? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Jordane? For thy brethren ad thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence. Beleeue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As forme (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therfore haue I forsaken it. Myne heretage is vnto me, as a spieckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. So hence, and gather all the bestes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

Dyuerse byrdes haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes & deserte. They haue layed it waiste: and now that it is waiste, it sigheth vnto me. Meethe whole londe lieth waiste, and no man regardeth it. The destroyers come ouer the heech euery waye, for the swearde of the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of y^e lōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynge, because of the greate wiath of the LORDE.

C Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne euil neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (nameiy Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Iuda from amonge them. And whē I haue rooted the out, I wil be at one with the agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and brynge them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne y^e wayes of them, to sweare by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to sweare by Baal) the shal they be reckened amonge my people. But yf they wil not obeye, the will I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saith the LORDE.

The XIII. Chapter.

Mouer, thus saied the LORDE vnto me: go thy waye & get the a linnen breche, and gyrd it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a brech, acordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared & put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vnto Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Up, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the brech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the brech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

The xiiij. Chap.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus saith the LORDE: Euen so will I corruppe the pryde off Iuda, and the hie mynde off Ierusalē. This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my worde, they folowe y^e wicked ymaginacions off their owne hert, & hange vpon straūge goddes, the haue they served & worshipped: and therfore they shalbe as this brech, that serueth for nothinge.

For as stratelly as a brech lieth vpon a mā's loynes, so stratelly dyd I bynde y^e whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Iuda vnto me, saith the LORDE: that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: y^e they might be in honoure: but they wolde not obeye me. Therfore laye this ryddle before them, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: euery pot shal be fylled with wyne. And they shal saye: thūkest thou we knowe not, y^e euery pot shalbe fylled with wyne? Then shalt thou saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I shal fyll all the inhabitours of this lōde wth dronkenes, the kynges that syt vpoⁿ Dauides stole, the prestes and prophetes, with all y^e dwell at Ierusalem. And I will shute them one agaynst another, yee y^e fathers agaynst the sonnes, saith the LORDE.

I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but destroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no disdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that speaketh. Honour y^e LORDE youre God hercin, or he take his light from you, and or ever you re fete stamble in darknesse at y^e hill: iest whē ye loke for the light, he turne it in to y^e shadowe and darknesse of dearch. But yf ye wil not heare me, that geue you secrete warnynge, I will mourne from my whole herte for youre stubburnesse. Piteously will I reepe, and the teares shal gush out of myne eyes. For the LORDES flocke shalbe caried awaye captiue.

Tell the kinge & the rulers: Humble yo^r selues, set you downe lowe, for y^e crowne of yo^r glory shal fall from youre heade. The cities toward the south shal be shut vp, & no man shal open the. All Iuda shal be caried awaye captyne, so that none shall remayne.

Lift vp youre eyes, and beholde the, that come from the North: Like a fat flocke shal they fall vpon the. To whom wilt thou make thy mone, when they come vpon the? for thou hast taught the thy self, and made the masters ouer the. Shal not sorowe come vpon the, as on a woman travelinge with childe? And yf thou woldest saye the in thine hert: Wherfore come these thinges vpon me? Eue for the multitude of thy blasphemies, shall thy hynder partes & thy fete be discovered.

For like as the man of Inde maye chaunge his tynne, & the car of the mountayne hir spectes: so maye yet hathe exercised in euell, do good. Therfore will I scatte you, lyke as y^e stobbe that is take awaye with y^e south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saith the LORDE: because ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceatful thinges. Therfore shall I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discover thy thees, that thy prynces maye be sene: y^e aduourie, thy deedly malice, thy beastlynnes and thy shamefull whordome. For vpon the felde and hilles I haue sene thy abhominacions. Wo be vnto the (o Ierusalem) whē wilt thou ever be clensed enymore?

The XIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shewed vnto Jeremy, concerninge y^e death off the frutes.

Iuda shal mourne, men shall not go moch more thorow his gates: the londe shal be nomore had in reputacion, & the crye of Ierusalem shal breake out. The lordes shall sende their seruantes to fetch water, & when they come to the welles, they shal fynde no water, but shal carie their vessels home emptie. They shal be ashamed & confounded, & shal couer their heades. For the grounde shal be dried vp, because there cometh no rayne vpon it. The plowmen also shal be ashamed, & shal couer their heades. The hynde shal forsake the yonge fawne, that se bilgeth forth in y^e felde, because there shal be no grasse. The wilde Asses shall stonde in the Masse, and drawe in their wynde like the Dragons, their eyes shal sayle for waite of grasse.

The xiiij. Chap. Ho. xxx.

Doubtes oure owne wickednesse rewarde vs: But LORDE do thou acordinge to y^e name, though oure transgressions and synnes be many. For thou art the comforte & helpe of Irael in the tyme of treuble. Why wilt thou be as a stranger in the Londe, and as one that goeth ouer the felde, & cometh in only to remayne for a night? Why wilt thou make thy self a coward, and as it were a graue that yet maye not helpe? For thou art ours (o LORDE) and we beate thy name, therfore forsake vs not.

Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people y^e haue pleasure to go so nembly wth their fete, and leaue not of, and therfore displease the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bunge agayne to remembraunce all their mysdedes, & punysh all their synnes. Yee euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offre burnt offrises & sacrifices, yet wil not I accepte them. For I will destroye them with the swearde, hunger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no hunger shall come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continual rest in this place.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The prophetes preach lies vnto them in my name. I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende the: yee they preach vnto you false visions, charmynges, vanite, and disceatfulnesse of their owne herte. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuertheles haue not sent) and y^e saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner hunger be in this londe: With swearde & with hunger shal those prophetes perishe, and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Ierusalem, dye of hunger, & be slayne with the swearde, (and there shal be no man to burie them) both they & their wyues, their sonnes and their daughters. For thus wil I poure their wickednes vpon the. This shalt thou saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceasseinge daye & night. For my people shal be destroyed with greate harme, and shall perishe with a greace plague. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Yff I come in to the cite, lo, they be all famished of hunger.

Be not displeased (o LORDE) for thy names sake, for get not thy louynge kyndnes: Remembre y throne of thyne honoure, breake not the covenante, that thou hast made with vs. Are there any amonge the goddes of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou it o LORDE our God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these thinges.

The XV. Chapter.

A Then spake the LORDE vnto me, ad sayde: Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet haue I no herte to this people. Dryue them awaye, that they maye go out of my sight. And yf they saye vnto the: Whyther shal we go? The tell the: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swearde, some to hunger, some in to captiuite. For I will bunge foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. The swearde shal strangle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre ad beestes of the earth shal eatte them vp, and destroye them. I will scatere them aboute al so in all kingdomes and londes to be plagued, because of Manasses the sonne of Ezechias kinge of Juda, for the thinges that he dyd in Jerusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Jerusalem? Who shal be sory for the? Or who shal make intercession, to opteyne peace for the? seinge thou goest frome, ad turnest backward, saith the LORDE: Therfore I will stretch out myne honde agaynst the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatere the abroad with the fanne on every side of the londe: I will waiste my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sonnes of the see. Vpon y mothers of their children, I shal bunge a destroyer in the noone daye. Sodenly and vnawarres, shal I sende a feare vpon their cities. She that hath borne viij. children, shal haue none, hir herte shal be full of sorowe.

The Sonne shall fayle her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and saynte for very heynesse. As for those y remay-ne, I wil delyuer them vnto the swearde off their enemies, saith the LORDE. O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, an enemye and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaned vpon vsury, yet every man speake euell vpon me. And y LORDE answered me: Ledenot I the then vnto good: Comenot I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe y, when thine enemye oppresseth the: Doth one yron hurte another, or one metall that cometh from the north, another? As for youre riches and treasure, I wil geue them out in to a pray, not for any money, but because of all youre synnes, that ye haue done i all youre coastes. And I wil bunge you with youre enemies in to a londe, y ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE (sayde J then) thou knowest all thinges, therfore remembre me, ad viset me, delyuer me fro my persecuters: Receaue not my cause in y lōge wiarth, yett thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. When I had founde thy wordes, I at them vp gredey: they haue made my hert ioyfull & glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God off hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scorneres, nether is my delyte therin: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heynnes endure for euer? Are my plagis then so greates, y they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynue? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: If thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto the: and so shal I make the a stronge wall of stele agaynst this people. They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuaile. For I myself will be with the, to helpe the, and delyuer the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and delyuer the out of the honde of Trauntes.

The XVI. Chapter.

O Orner, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt take y no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible death, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as dō

D Orner, thus saide the LORDE vnto Jeremy: Go thy waye, and bye
the an erthen pytcher, and hunge forth the Senatours and these prestes in to the valley of the children off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of bricke, & shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye Kinges of Iuda, and ye citefyns of Jerusalem: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe soch a plage vpon this place, that yf eares of all that heare it, shal glo-
we. And that because they haue forsakē me, and vnhalowed this place, and haue offred
in it vnto straunge goddes: whō nether they,
their fathers, ner the Kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also wth the bloude of innocentes, for they haue set vp an altier vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt offering vnto Baal, which I nether cōnumanded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

Beholde therefore, yf tyme cōmeth (saith the LORDE) yf this place shal nomore be called Tophet, ner yf valley of yf childre of En-non, but yf valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Iuda & Jerusalē, & kill thē downe wth the swearde in yf sight of their enemies, and of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carca es wil I ge-ue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and bestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolate, and despyed: that who so geeth
there by, shal be abashed & geast vpon her,
because of all hir plagues.

I will fede them also wth the flesh of their sonnes & their daughters. See every one shal eate vp another in the beseginge & straynes-se, wher wth their enemies (yf seke their lyues) shal kepe thē in. And the pitcher shalt thou briake in the sight of the mē, yf shal be wth the,
and saye vnto thē: Thus saith the LORDE
off hoostes: Eue so wil I destroye this prople & cite: as a Potter breaketh a vessel, that can not be made whole agayne.

In Tophet shal they be buried, for they shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saith the LORDE, and to thē yf dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (For the houses of Jeru-salē & the houses of the Kinges of Iuda are defyled, like as Tophet,) because off all the

2 When Pashur the preast, the sonne off Immer, chefe in the house off y LORDE, herde Jeremy preach so stedfastly: he smote Jeremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Jamin, in the house off y LORDE. The nexte daye folowinge, Pashur broughte Jeremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Jeremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nomore Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull and a frayed) euery where. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make the a frayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure y: which shal perishe with the swerde off their enemies, euen before y face.

But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be carried vnto Babilon with all thine household, & to Babilō shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refrehest me, & makest me stronge agayne. All the daye longe am I despyed, and laughed to scorne of euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruction. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities which y LORDE turned upside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure of them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue hirself, that the byrth might not hane come out, but remayned still in her. 2 These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchias, and Sephonias the sonne, of Maasia prest, sayenge: Are counsell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peradventure) will deale with vs, accordinge to his marvelous power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Jeremy: Heare Sedechias this answer. Thus saith the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherewith ye fight agaynst the kinge of Babilō & the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute y walles: & I wil brige the together in to the myddest of this cite, and I my self will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, and with a mightie arme, in greate displeasure and terrible wrath: and will smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both me and carell shall dye of the pestilence.

B And after this (saith the LORD) I shall deliuer Sebedchias the kinge of Iuda, and his seruantes, his people (and soch as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swerde, and hunger) into the power of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon: yee in to the hōdes of their enemies, into the hōdes of those yf folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with yf swerde: they shall not pite chē, they shall not spare them, they shall haue no mercy vpon them.

C And vnto this people thou shalt saye: Thus saith the LORD: beholde, I laye before you the waye of life and deeth. Who so abyde in this cite, shall perish: ether wth the swerde, with hunger, or with pestilence. But who so goeth out to holde on yf Caldees parce, yf besege it, he shall saue his life, and shall wyne his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite (saith the LORD) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geue in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, and be brent with fyre.

Z And vnto the house of the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: heare the worde of yf LORD (or thou house off Dauid) for thus saith the LORD: Ministre rightuousnes, and that soone, deliuer the oppressed fro violent power: or euer my terrible wiath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quēch it, because of the wickednes of youre imaginations. Beholde (saith the LORD) I wil come vpo you, that dwell in the valleis, rockes and feldes and saye: Tush, who will make vs a frayed? or who will come in to oure houses? For I will vyset you (saith the LORD) because off the wickednes off youre inventions, and will kyndle soch a fyre in youre wod, as shall cōsume all, that is aboute you.

The XXII. Chapter.

A Thus sayde the LORD also: Go downe in to the house of the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, and saye: heare the worde off the LORD, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruantes and yf people, that go in and out at this gate. Thus the LORD commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, deliuer the oppressed fro the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, and shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

house kynges, to set vpo Dauides seate: they shall be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon houses, both they and their seruantes, and their people. But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by myne owne self (saith yf LORD) this house shall be waist. For thus hath the LORD spoken vpon the kynges house of Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye of it, yf I make the not so waist (and thy cities also) that no man shall dwell there in? I will prepare a destroyer with his weapēs for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherfore hath the LORD done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenaunt off the LORD their God, and haue worshipped and serued straunge goddes. Mourn not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he cometh not agayne, and seeth his natyue countre no more. For thus saith the LORD, as touchinge Sellam the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, which reigned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

He shall neuer come hither agayne, for he shall dye in the place, where vnto he is led captiue, and shall se this londe nomore. Wo worth him, that buyldeth his house with rightuousnes, and his perlers with the good, that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neighbors laboure, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: I wil buylde me a wyde house, and gorgeous perlers: he causeth wyndowes to be hewen therein, and the sylinges and geastes makech he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, now that thou prouokest me to wiath with yf Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as longe as he dealt with equite and rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped yf oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saith the LORD. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therefore, thus saith the LORD agaynst Joachim, yf sonne of Josias kyng of Iuda: They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas sister:

Vee the waye that men take, is wicked, z their gouernaunce is nothinge like the holy woide of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the presies them selues are polluted w poctytes, ad their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, their waye shall be slippery in the darcknesse, where in they maye sticke and fall. For I will bringe a plage vpon them, even the yeare of the ir visicacion, saith the LORDE. and disceane you: for they speake the mea-nyng of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prosper right well.
And vnto all them, that walke after the lust
of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marked his yf they had continued in my counsell and well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, sayenge: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this cōtinue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes,

and to preach the crafte sotylte of their ow-

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde,
I wil vpo the prophetes, that steale my wor-

I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophe-

They shal do this people greate harme, sa-

If this people, ether my prophete or prest are the, and saye: what is the burthen of the LORDE? Thou shalt saye vnto them:
What? burthen? Therefore wil I cast you fro me (saith the LORDE) because ye youre selues are a burthen. And the prophet, prest or people that vseth this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) him wil I viset, and his hou-

But thus shall ye saye, every one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen?
or, what is the LORDES commaundement?
And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the luyngge God the

Thus shall eueryman saye to the prophetes: what answer hath the LORDE geuen
the? Or, what saith the LORDE? And not once to name the burthen of the LORDE.
Therefore thus saith the LORDE: For so moch as ye haue vsed this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) where as I notwithstandinge sent vnto you, and forbade you to speake of the LORDES burthen:

Beholde therefore, I will repute you as a

The XXIII. Chapter.

The LORDE shewed me a visiō: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before the Temple of the LORDE, after the Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilō had led awaye captiue Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kynge of Iuda, the mightie men also of Iuda, with the workemasters and co-nyngemen of Jerusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good fyges, even like as those that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie figes, which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Jeremy? I sayde: fyges, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eat them.

The prophet Jeremy.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saith y LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good syges, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place into the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne into this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wil be their God, for they shal returne vnto me with the ir whole herte.

The XXVI. Chapter.

In the begynnyng of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Juda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE: Stande in the court of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (one of the cities of Juda) come to do worshippe in the LORDES house, all the wordes which I commaunde the to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, yf (perauenture) they will herke, and turne every man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determed to brynge vpon them, because of their wicked inventions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vpon tyme, and still sendinge: If ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhored of all the people of the earth. And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Jeremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

Jer. 7. a

Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE: it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo: and this cite shal be so waiste, that no man shal dwell here in?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Jeremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Juda herde of this rumoure, & they came soone out of the kinges palace into the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LORDE. Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers & to all the people, these wordes: This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye yourselves haue herde with youre eares.

the LORD your God: so shall the LORD repent of the plague, y he had deuysed agaynst you. Now as forme: I am in your handes, do with me, as yet thinke expedient and good. But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shall make your selues, this cite & all the inhabitants there of, guilty of innocent bloude. For this is of a treuth: that the LORD hath sent me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in your eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORD our God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, & sayde thus vnto all the people: Muche as the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda: Thus saith the LORD of hostes: Sion shall be plowed like a fild, Jerusalem shall be an heape of stones, & the hill of the LORDS house shall be turned to an hie wod. Byd Ezechias y kinge of Iuda & the people of Iuda put him to death for this: To verely, but rather feared y LORD, & made their praier vnto him. For the which cause also y LORD repented of the plague, y he had deuysed agaynst them. Shulde we then do soch a shamefull dede agaynst our soules? There was a prophet also, that preached stiffly in the name of the LORD, called Urias the sonne of Smeia of Canathiarim: this man preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lode, accordinge to all as Jeromy saith. Now when Joachim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herd his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. When Urias perceaued that, he was afrayed, & fled, & departed in to Egypte.

Then Joachim the kinge sent seruantes into the lode of Egypte, namely: Elnathan the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men w him into Egypte, which fetched Urias out of Egypte, & brought him vnto kinge Joachim that slewe him with the swearde, & cast his deed body into y comon peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Jeromy, that he came not in to the handes of the people to be slayne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

At the begynnynge of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Iuda, came this worde vnto Jeromy from the LORD, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes & chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende the to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Amon, the kinge of Tyre, & to the kinge of Sidon: & that by the messengers, which shall come to Jerusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel, speaketh thus vnto yo masters: I am he that made the earth, the men & y catell that are vpon the ground, with my greate power & outstretched arme, & haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. And now will I delynce all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruaunt. The bestes also of the fild shall I geue him to do him seruyce. And all people shall serue him, & his sonne, and his childe children, vntil the tyme of the same lode be come also: Yee many people & greatesinges shall serue him.

Moreover, that people & kingdome which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that wil not put their neckes vnder y yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I visit with swearde, with hunger, with pestilence, vntil I haue consumed them in his handes, saith the LORD. And therfore, folowe not your prophetes, soyth sayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye vnto you: ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bringe you farre from your londe, & that I might cast you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I wil let remayne still in their owne lode (saith the LORD) & they shall occupie it, & dwell therein.

All these thinges tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and sayde: Put your neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him & his people, that ye maye lyue. Why wilt thou and thy people perish with the swearde, with hunger, with pestilence: like as the LORD hath deuysed for all people, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon? Therfore geue no eare vnto those prophetes (that tell you: Ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, nether haue I sent them, saith the LORD: how be it they are bolde, falsely for to prophecie in my name: that I might y sooner dryue you out, & that ye might perish with yo preachers.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saith the LORD: Heare not the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDS house shall shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophecie lies vnto you. Heare them not, but serue

the kinge of Babilon, yf yemaye lyue. Wherefore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be commytred vnto them, then let them praye the LORDE of hoostes, that the remnaunt of the ornamentes (which are in the house of the LORDE, and remayne yet in the house of the kinge of Juda and at Jerusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hoostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the lauer, the seate and the residue of the ornamentes that yet remayne in this cite, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon toke not, when he caried awaye Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kinge of Juda, with all the power of Juda and Jerusalem, from Jerusalem vnto Babilon, captyue.

Next thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, as touchinge the residue of the ornamentes of the LORDES house, of the kinge of Judas house, and of Jerusalem: They shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there they shall remayne, vntil I visset them, saith the LORDE. Then wil I bringe them hither agayne. And this was done in the same yeare: euē in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Juda.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

IN the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Juda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Hananias yf sonne of Assur the prophet of Gabon, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes & of all the people, & sayde: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I haue brokē the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare wil I bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, yf Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried awaye from this place vnto Babilon. And I will bringe agayne Jechonias the sonne of Joachim the kinge of Juda himself, with all the prisoners of Juda, (yf are caried vnto Babilon,) euē in to this place, saith yf LORDE, for I wil breake yf yock of the kinge of Babilō.

Then the prophet Jeremij gaue answere vnto that prophet Hananias, before the prestes & before all the people that were present in the house of the LORDE. And the prophet Jeremij sayde: Amen, the LORDE do that, & graunce the thinge, which thou hast prophesied: that he maye bringe agayne all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, & restore all the prisoners from Babilon in to this place. Nevertheless, hearken thou also, what I will saye, that thou & all the people maye heare: The prophetes that were before vs in tymes past, which prophesied of warre, or trouble, or pestilence, ether of peace, vpon many nations & greate kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had sende them in very dede) when the thinge came to passe, which that prophet tolde before.

And Hananias the prophet toke the chayne from the prophet Jeremias neck, & brake it: & with that sayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORDE spoken: Euē so wil I breake the yock of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilō, from the neck of all nations, yee & that within this two yeare. And so the prophet Jeremij wente his waye. After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the prophet Jeremias neck, and broken it: The worde of the LORDE came vnto the prophet Jeremij sayenge: Go, and tell Hananias these wordes: Thus saith the LORDE: Thou hast broken the chayne of wodd, but in steade of wodd, thou shalt make chaynes of yron. For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye serue Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, yee & so shal they do. And I wil geue him yf beestes in the felde. Then sayde the prophet Jeremij vnto yf prophet Hananias: Heare me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORDE hath not sent the, but thou bringest this people in to a false beleue. And therefore thus saith yf LORDE: beholde, I wil sende the out of the lōde, & within a yeare thou shalt die, because thou hast falsely spokē agaynst the LORDE. So Hananias the prophet died the same yeare in the seventh Moneth.

The XXIX. Chapter.

This is the Copie of the lettre, yf Jeremij the prophet sent from Jerusalem vnto the prisoners: the Senatours, prestes, prophetes, & all the people, whom Nabuchodonosor had led vnto Babilō: after yf tyme yf kinge Jechonias & his Quene, his chambelaynes, the prynces of Juda & Jerusalem & the workmasters of Jerusalem were departed thither. Which lettre, Elasa yf sonne of Saphā & Gamaria yf sonne of Heldia dyd beare, whō Sedechias the kinge of Juda sent vnto Babilō to Nabuchodonosor yf kinge of Babilō: these were yf wordes of Jeremias lettre: Thus hath yf LORDE of hoostes yf God of Israel spokē, vnto all the prisoners, yf were led frō Jerusalem vnto Babilō: Buylde you houses to dwell therein: plante you gardēs, yf

For they haue not onely defiled their neghbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wor-des in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, & assure, saith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Tchelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saith

 Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy we might enioye the frutes thereof. Which lettre Sophonias the priest dyd rede, and let

Then came the worde of the LORDE vn-

And from thence forth shall no man teach his neighbour or his brother, and saye: knowe the LORDE: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest unto the hiest, saith the LORDE. For I will forgene their mysdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes any more. Like as this ordinance shall neuer be taken out of my sight, saith the LORDE: So shall the sede of Israel neuer cresse, but all waye be a people before me.

Moreover, thus saith the LORDE like as the heaven above can not be measured, and as the foundations of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they have commycted, saith the LORDE. The XXXII. Chapter.

These wordes spake the LORDE unto Jeremy, in the tenth yeare of Sedechias kinge of Juda, which was y xviij. yeare of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babylons hooste layed sege unto Jerusalem. But Jeremy the prophet laye bounde in y courte of the prison, which was in the kinge of Judas house: where Sedechias the kinge of Juda caused him to be layed, because he had prophesied of this manner: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deliyer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babylons, which shall take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Juda, he shall not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babylons: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shall be caried vnto Babylons, and there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saith the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hode to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prospere.

And Jeremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Zananee the sonne of Sellum thine Uncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme y londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Zananee myne Uncles sonne came to me in the courte of the prison, (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anathot, in the countre of Ben Jamin: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therfore redeme it. Then I preceaved, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Zananee of Anathot, myne Uncles sonne, and weyed him there the moneye even seven syles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the moneye vpon the waighes. So I toke the eydence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the eydence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Zananee my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the eydence, and before all the Jewes that were therby in the courte of the prison.

I charged Baruch also before them, sayinge: The LORDE of hostes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed eydence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldees and vynyardes shall be possessed agayne in this londe.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

21 Worouer the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the courte of the prison: Thus saith the LORDE,

that he taketh in honde: even he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herder the: I haue shewed greate and hie thinges, which were vntrowne vnto
you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite,
and the houses of the kinges of Juda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to be-sege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcasses of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them who-

23 And I will retorne the captiuyte of June, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the

in this londe, which is voyde from men and

In the londe of Ben Jamin, in the fel-des of Jerusalem, and in the cities of Juda shal
the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that tellet them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil perfourme that good thinge, which I haue promised vnto
the house of Israel and to the house of Juda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto David, the braunch of rightuousnes, and he shall do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. In these daies shal Juda be helped, and Jerusalem shal dwell safe, and he that shal call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: David shal neuer want one, to sit vpon the stole of the house of Israel: nether shal the prestes and Levites want one to offre all waye before me, burnt offerings, to kyndle the meat offerings, &
to prepare the sacrifices.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with David my seruaunt, and so he not to haue a sonne to

For like as the starres of heauen maye not

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came

But yet I will turne agayne their captiuite, and be mercifull vnto them.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

These are the wordes which the LORD spake vnto Jeremij, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, & all his hostes (out of all the kingdomes yf were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Jerusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORD God of Israel: Go, & speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, & tell him: The LORD sendeth this worde: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye prisoner, and deliuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORD, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORD vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swerde, but shalt die in peace. Like as yf fewe fathers, the kinges, thy progenitours were biente: so shalt thou be biente also, & in the meynynge they shal saye: eh lord. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORD.

Then spake Jeremij the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Jerusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste besieged Jerusalem, and the remnant of the cities: Namely, Lachis & Azekah, which yet remayned of the stronge defended cities of Iuda.

These are the wordes that the LORD spake vnto Jeremij the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Jerusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a libertie: so that every man shulde let fre go his seruauit and hant emayde, & ebie & ebie'sse, & no Acwe to hoide his brother as a bondeman. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But yo^r fathers obeyed me not & hertened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in yf ye proclaimed, every mā to let his neghbeure go fre, & in yf ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that heareth my name: But yet ye haue turned youre selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, yf every man hath requyred his seruauit and handemayden agayne, when ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be youre bondmen. And therefore thus saith the LORD: Ye haue not obeyed me, every man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neghbo^r: wherefore, I will call you vnto a fredome, saith the LORD: euen vnto the swerde, to the pestilence, and to hunger, and will make you to be plagued in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Meet those men that haue brokē my couenaunt, and not kept the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: when they herred the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof: The prynces of Iuda, the prynces of Jerusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the loutē (which were thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the hondes of them that sele me vpon the ir lyues.

And their deeb bodies shal be meate for the feules of the ayre, and keestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his prynces, I will deliuer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that desyre to slaye them, and in to the hōde of the kyng of Babilons hooste, which now is departed from you: But thorow my conmaundement (saith the LORD) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shal fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Then toke I Jassamas the sonne of Jeremyn, the sonne of Sabazania, and his brethren and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igodalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the princes, that is about the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the cheefe off the tresury. And before the sonnes of the kynred off the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, for Jonadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and youre sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne, buylde no houses, sowe no seide, plante no vynes, yet ye shall haue no vynyardes: but for all youre tyme ye shall dwell in tentes, yf ye maye lyue longe in the lode, wherin ye be straungers.

Jer. 19. b

B Thus haue we obeyed the commaundment of Jonadab yf sonne of Rechab oure father, in all yf he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, o' sonnes z oure doughters. Necher buylde we eny house to dwell therein, we haue also amonge vs nether vynyardes, ner come lode to sowe: but we dwell in tentes, we o' eye, z do acordinge vnto all, that Jonadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now yf Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon came vp in to the lode, we sayde: come, let vs go to Ierusalē, yf we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ad the Assirians: z so we dwell now at Ierusalē. Then came yf worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremyn, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Go z tell whole Juda z all the inhabitours of Ierusalē: Wyll ye not be refourmed, to obeye my wordes? saith the LORDE. The wordes which Jonadab the sonne off Rechab commaunded his sonnes, yf they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast z surely kepte: for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne: but obeye their fathers commaundement. But as for

Then dyd Jeremyn call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, z Baruch wrote in the booke at yf mouth of Jeremyn, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken vnto him. And Jeremyn commaunded Baruch sayenge: I am in prison, so that I maye not come in to the house of yf LORDE: therfore go thou thither, z rede the booke, that thou hast writtē at my mouth: Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, z rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fasting daye: that the people, whole Juda, z all they that come out of the citie, maye heare. Peradventure they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, every one from his wicked waye. For greete is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this peple.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, acordinge vnto all that Jeremyn the prophet commaunded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the booke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the systh yere off Joachim yf sonne of Josias kinge of Juda, in 10nc. 25 d Then read Baruch the wordes of Jeremy out of the booke within the house of the LORD, out of y^e treasury of Samarias the sonne off Saphan the scribe, which is besyde the hyer losse off the new dore of the LORDES house: that all y^e people might heare. Now when Micheas the sonne off Samarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORD out of y^e booke, he wrote downe to the kinges palace in to y^e scribes chābre for there all y^e prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalas the sonne of Semei, Elnathan the sonne off Achbor, Samaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hananias, with all the pūces. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, y^e he herde Baruch rede out of the booke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent Jehudi y^e sonne of Nathanas the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the booke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke y^e booke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Sit downe, and rede the booke, y^e we may heare also. So Baruch red, y^e they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abashed one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how dost thou wyte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the booke.

Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Jeremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the booke in the chābre off Elisama the scribe, and tolde the kinge all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kinge sent Jehudi to fetch him y^e booke, which he brought out of Elisama y^e scribes chābre. And Jehudi red it, that the kinge and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kinge sat in the wynter house, for it was in their moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And when Jehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof, he cut the booke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kinge himselfe, ner his seruantes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalas and Samarias, besought the kinge, that he wolde not burne the booke: notwithstandinge y^e kinge wolde not heare them, but commaunded Jeremy hel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia y^e sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Jeremy the prophet: but the LORD kepte them out of sight. After now that the kinge had brente the booke, and y^e sermons which Baruch wrote at y^e mouth off Jeremy: The worde of the LORD came vnto Jeremy sayenge: Take another booke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first booke, which Joachim the kinge off Juda hath brente.

And tell Joachim the kinge off Juda, Thus saith the LORD: thou hast brente y^e booke, and thoughtest within thy selfe: Why hast thou written therein, that the kinge off Babilon shal come, and make this lode waile? so that he shal make both people and catel to be out of it? Therefore thus the LORD saith, of Joachim the kinge off Juda: The re shal none of his generacion sit vpon the trone of David. His deede cease shal be cast out, that the heat off the daye, and the frost off the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his seide, and of his seruantes. Moreover all the euell that I haue promised the (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon y^e inhabitours of Jerusalem, and vpon all Juda. Then toke Jeremy another booke, and gaue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therein out of the mouth off Jeremy: all the sermons that were in the first booke, which Joachim the kinge off Juda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

Eze. 17. b yenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE our God for vs. Now Jeremy walked fre among the people at that tyme, and was not put in prison as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egypte: which when the Caldees that beseged Jerusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

B Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy the prophet, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel, This answer shall ye geue to the kynge of Iuda, that sent you vnto me for counsell: Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egypte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, & fight agaynst this cite, wyne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saith the LORDE: Disceane not yo^r owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner:

Eze. 46. a Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs: No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees, that besege you, and every one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now when the hooste of the Caldees was brokē vp from Ierusalem for feare of the Egyptians armye, Jeremy went out of Ierusalem towarde the lode of Ben Jamin, to do certayne busynesse there amonge y^e people. And when he came vnder Ben Jamins porte, there was a porter called Jerias the sonne of Selamias y^e zōne of Hananias, which fell vpon him & toke hym, sayenge: y^e mynde is to runne to the Caldees.

Eze. 46. a Then sayde Jeremy: It is not so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Jerias wolde not belue him, but broughte Jeremy bound before the princes. Wherefore the princes were angrie with Jeremy, causinge him to be beaten, & to be layed in prison in the house of Ionathas the scribe. For he was the ruler of the prison. Thus was Jeremy put in to the dongeon & prison, and so laye there a longe tyme. Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, & called him, & axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynes (that now is in honde) cometh of the LORDE? Jeremy answered: yee y^e it doth: & thou (sayde he) shalt be deliuered in to the kynge of Babilons power.

Eze. 46. c D Moreover, Jeremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What haue I offended agaynst y^e, agaynst thy seruantes, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in prison? Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophced vnto you and sayde, that y^e kynge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you & this lode? And therefore heare now, o my lord the kynge: let my prayer be accepte before the, & sende me nomore in to y^e house of Ionathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sedechias the kynge commaunded to put Jeremy in the fore entrie off the prison, and daily to the geuen him a cake of bred, and els no dyghte meate, vntill all the bred in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Jeremy remayned in y^e fore entrie off the prison.

S Aphas the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Juchal the sonne of Selamias, & Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, y^e Jeremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swerde, with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shall escape, wynnynge his soule for a pray, & shall lyue. For thus saith the LORDE: This cite (no doute) must be deliuered in to y^e power of the kinge of Babilō, & he also shall wyne it. The sayde the princes vnto y^e kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to deatch, for thus he discourageth the hōdes of the soudyers y^e be in this cite, & the hōdes of all the people, when he speaketh soch wordes vnto the. This mā verely labourereth not for peace of y^e people, but muche fe. Sedechias the kinge answered and sayde: lo, he is in yo^r hōdes, for y^e kinge maye denye you nothynge. Then toke they Jeremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entrie off the prison. And they let downe Jeremy wth coardes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Jeremy stak fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Moian beyng a chamberlayne in the kynes court, vnderstode, that they had cast Jeremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynes house, and spake to the kynge (which the sat vnder the porte off Ben Jamin) these wordes: My lord the kynge, where as these men medle with Jeremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in prison, there to dye of hunger, for there is no more bred in the cite. The the kynge commaunded Abdemelech the Moian, and sayde: Take from hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, & drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men wth him, & went to y^e house of Amalech, & there vnder an almyr he gas olderaggas & worne cloutes, & let the downe by a coarde, in to the dongeon to Jeremy.

The prophet Jeremyn.

And Abdemelech the Moian sayde vnto the prophet Jeremyn: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte the and the coardes: and Jeremyn dyd so. So they drew vp Jeremyn with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remayned in the fore entrie of the prison. The Sedechias the kynge sent and caused Jeremyn the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the

The Jeremyn answerde Sedechias: If I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death: yf I geue the counsell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an ooth secretly vnto Jeremyn, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Jeremyn vnto Sedechias: Thus saith y LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: If case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be brett, yee both thou and thy household shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shall this cite be deliuered in to the bondes of the Caldees which shall set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Jeremyn: I am afrayde for the Jewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Jeremyn answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O herten vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseeke y) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Judas house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, y thou art disceaued: and that y men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy feet fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their bondes, but shalt be y kynge of Babilons prisoner, & this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Jeremyn: I doke y no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceaue, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what saydest thou to the: hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what saydest thou to the: So thou geue them this answer: I haue humbly besought the kynge, that he will let me lye no more in Jonathas house, that I dye not there: Then came all the pynces vnto Jeremyn, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him. Then they helde their peace, for they perceaued nothynge. So Jeremyn abode still in the fore entrie off the prison, vntill the daye that Jerusalem was wonne.

The xxxix. Chapter.

Now when the cite off Jerusalem was taken (for in the ix. yeare of Sedechias kynge of Juda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Jerusalem. And in the xi. yeare of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth y ix. daye of y Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, & sacche downe vnder the porte: Nergail, Sarezet, Samgarnebo, Sarschim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarezet, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of Juda with his souldyers sawe them, they fled, and departed out of y cite by night thorow the kynes garde, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente toward the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Jericho, and brought him prisoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iudgment vpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Juda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and bounde him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Jer. 39. d

Moreover, the Caldees brent vp the kynes palace, with y other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Jerusalem. As for the remnaunt of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to helpe them (what so ever was left of the comē sorte) Nabuzaradan the chiefe captayne caried them to Babilon. So Nabuzaradan y chefe capayne, Nabusabban chefe chamberlayne, Mergalsarezet the tresurer and all the kynge of Babilons lordes, sent for Jeremy, and caused him be fet out off the fore entrie off the prison, and comyncted him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. Now whyle Jeremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie of the prison, y worde off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Moorian: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes y God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plague that I haue deuysed for this cite, will I brynge vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil deluyt the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the hondes off those men, whom thou fearest. This is the maner, how the LORDE intreated Jeremy, when Nabuzaradan the chefe capayne had let him go ffe from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the prisoners, that were caried from Jerusalem and Juda vnto Babilon. The chefe capayne called for Jeremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spakemightely be fore off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and perfourmed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therfore comyneth this plague vpon you. Beholde, I will se the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vphē: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: loke where thou thinkest conuenient and good for the to abyde, there dwell. Now when y capaynes of the hooste of Juda (which w their felowes were scatted abroad on euery syde in y lōde) understode, y the kynge of Babilon had made Godolias y sonne of Ahicam gouernoure in the lōde, and y man, wife and childe, yee and the poore men in the londe (y were not led captyne to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Jurisdiction: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Ismael the sonne of Nathamias, Johana and Jonathan the sonnes of Carea, Sareas the sonne of Tanhomech, the sonnes of Ophus y Leptophetice, Jesanias y sonne of Machari, w their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne off Saphan, swore vnto thē and their felowes on this maner: Be not afrayed to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde, and do the kynge of Babilon seruyce, so shal ye prosper. Beholde, I dwell at Masphat to be an officer in the Caldees behalfe, and to satisfie such as come to vs. Therfore gather you wyne, corne and oyle, and kepe them in your ware houses, and dwell in your cities, that ye haue in keepinge.

See all the Jewes also y dwelt in Moab vnder y Ammonites, in Idumea and in all y collieries, whē they herde, y the kynge of Babilon had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan, gouernoure vpo thē y were left in Juda: All the Jewes (I saye) returned out off all places where they were fled vnto: and came in to the lōde of Juda to Godolias vnto Masphat, and gathered wyne and other frutes, and that very moch.

Moreover Johanna the sonne of Carea and all y capaynes of y hooste, y were scatted in Masphat, and sayde vnto him: Knowest thou not y Baalis kynge of y Ammonites hath sent Ismael y sonne of Nathamias, to slaye the? But Godolias y sonne of Ahicam beleued thē not. Thē sayde Johana the sonne of Carea vnto Godolias in Masphat these wordes secretly: Let me go (I praye the) and I will slaye Ismael the sonne of Nathamias, so y no body shal knowe it. Wherefore will he kyll the, y all the Jewes which resorte vnto the, might be scatted, and the remnant in Juda perish? Thē sayde Godolias the sonne of Ahicam to Johanna the sonne of Carea: Thou shalt not do it, for they are but lies, that men saye of Ismael. The XLI. Chap.

about the kynge, & ten men that were sworn with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael y sonne of Nathanas w^t those ten men that were sworn to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan w^t the swerde, & slewe hym, whom the kynge off Babilō had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Jewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vnknowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, frō Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdies, rent their clothes, & were all heuye, bringinge meat of fringes and incense in their hondes, to offere it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathanas went forth off Masphat wepinge, to meete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go youre waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathamas (with them that were sworn vnto him) slewe them, eue at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, y sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared the, and slewe them not with their brechren. Now the pyt wherin Ismael dyd cast the deed bodie off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kynge Asa caused to be made, for feare off Baasa the kynge off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the remnant off the people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, vpon whom Nabusaradan the chiefe Captayne had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicam gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathanas caried them awaye prisoners toward the Ammonites. But when Johanna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, herde of all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had done: they toke their companions, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sōne of Nathanas, and founde him by the waters of Rabim in Gabaon. And whē they returned, they came to Johanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathanas fled from Johanna w^t eight of his sworne companions, & wente to the Ammonites. Then Johanna the sonne off Carea and all the captaynes of the hooste that were w^t him, toke the remnant off the people, whom Ismael the sonne of Nathanas had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne of Ahicā) whom they also had rescued from his fightinge men, women & children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and wente frem thence, and sat them downe at Geruth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethleē, that they might go in to Egypte for feare of the Caldees: of whom they were afayed, because that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had slayne Godolias Ahicamis sonne, whom the kynge off Babilon had made gouernoure in the londe.

The XLII. Chapter.

All the rulers, and Johanna the sonne off Carea, Jesanias the sonne off Osias came with all the people frō the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Jeremy the prophet: O heare oure peticiō, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE y God, and for the remnant, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Jeremy the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Behelde, I will praye vnto God youre LORDE, as ye haue requyrd me: and loke what answer the LORDE geuerh you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothinge back frō you. And they sayde vnto Jeremy: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulness be oure recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commaundeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We will herten vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende the: that we maye prospere, when we haue followed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Jeremy. Then called he Johanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the people that were with him: &e & all the people frem the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saiethe the LORDE God of Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to laye forth youre prayers before him: If ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall buylde you vp, & not breake you downe: I shall plante you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as cōcer-nyng the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babylon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deliuer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I wil haue mercy vpon you, and brynge you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Nevertheless, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egypte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre hunger, there will we dwell. Wherfore heare now the worde of the LORDE, o ye remnaunt of Juda. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: If ye be whole purposed to go in to Egypte, ad to be there as straungers: the swearde that ye feare, shall ouertake you in Egypte: and the hunger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you into Egypte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off see purpose vnder take to go in to Egypte, there to ease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with hunger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plague, that I will bringe vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitants of Ierusalem, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egypte: For there ye shal be reuyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbiddeth you (o ye remnaunt of Juda) that ye shall not go in to Egypte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye els shal ye begyle youre selues. For ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and loke what answer the LORDE oure God genneth the, that bringe vs agayne, ad we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. If ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shall perishe with the swearde, with hunger & pestilence: even in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

The XLIII. Chapter.

Now when Jeremy had ended all y wordes of y LORDE God vnto y peo ple, (for their sakes to whom God had sent him) Asarias the sonne of Osias, & Johana y sonne of Carea, with all the proude personnes, sayde vnto Jeremy: Thou lye, the LORDE oure God hath not sent y to speake vnto vs, that we shulde not go in to Egypte, and dwell there: But Baruch the sonne of Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs, that he might bunge vs in to the captyte off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs awaye prisoners vnto Babylon.

So Johanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaines of the hooste, and all the peo ple folowed not the commaundement of the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Juda: But Johanna the sonne of Carea & all the captaines of the hooste, caried awaye all the remnaunt in Juda, that were come together agayne from the heithen (amonge whom they had bene scatred) to dwell in the londe of Juda: Men, women, childre, the kynges daughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chiefe captaine had left with Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. They caried awaye also the prophet Jeremy, Baruch the sonne of Nerias, and so came in to Egypte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement of God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take greate stones in thine hōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men of Juda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabucho donosor the kynge of Babylon my seruante, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall spiede his tente ouer them.

And when he cometh, he shal smyte the lōde of Egypte with slaughter, with prisonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples of the Egipcians goddes, and burnethem vp, & take them selues prisoners. Moreover he shall araye himself w the lōde of Egypte, like as a shepherde putteth on his cote, and shall departe his awaye from thence in peace. The pilers also of the temple of the Sonne that is in Egypte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the temples of the Egipcians goddes.

phus, at Memphis, & in the londe of Patures. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all y^e mysery, y^e
I haue brought vpon Jerusalem, and vpon all the cities of Iuda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwelling therein: &
y^e because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger:
In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ad
worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner yo^r fathers haue know-ne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruantes all the prophetes: I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no soch abheminable thinges, & thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowener herke, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion & wiath was kyndled, and it brente vp the cities of Iuda,
the felde with the stretes off Jerusalem: so that they were made waiste and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate enell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childre and babes of Iuda: so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wiath with the worshes of youre owne hondes: whē ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the londe off Egip-te, & here as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might utterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all naci-ons. Or, haue ye new forgotten the wickednes off yo^r forefathers, the wickednes off y^e Kynge of Iuda and their wyues, y^e wickednes that ye youre selues ad youre wyues haue done in the londe of Iuda, in the cite and in the londe off Jerusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not,
neither walke ye in my lawe and in my com-mandementes, that I haue geue vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God off Israel: I am stedfastly ad-vysed and determed, to punyssh you, and to rote out all Iuda. As for the remnaunt off Iuda that purposly wente into Egipre, there to ease them off their mysery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In y^e londe of Egipre shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swearde and with hon-ger. For from y^e leest vnto y^e most, they shall perishe with the swearde and with hunger.
Moroner they shall be reuyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them

The xliij. Chap.

that dwell in Egipre, as I haue visited Jerusalem: with the swearde, with hunger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Iuda, which are gone to dwell in Egipre, shall be left to come agayne in to y^e londe of Iuda: all though they thynke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shall come agayne, but soch as are fled awaye.

Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, &
a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egip-te in the cite of Patures, answerde Jeremy, & sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so euer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblations vnto the Quene off heauen: like as we and o^r forefathers, oure Kynge and oure heades haue done in the cities off Iuda, and in the stretes and felde of Jerusalem. For then had we plenteousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no mysfortune came vpon vs.

But sene we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, we haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perishe wth the swearde and hunger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heauen, did we make her cakes ad peure vnto her drinke offerings, to do her seruice, without oure husbondes wylls?

Then sayde Jeremy vnto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the fol-ke, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, yo^r forefathers, youre Kiges & rulers (wth all the people) haue offred in the cities of Juda, in the stretes and londe off Jerusalem?
and hath he not considered this in his myn-de? In so moch, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abheminable thynges which ye dyd? Is not youre londe desolate & voyde, yee and at hoired, so that no mā dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe
this daye?

Dyd not all this happen vnto you, because ye made soch sacrifice, and synned agaynst
the LORDE? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortu-ne happened vnto you, as it is come to passe
this daye.

The prophet Jeremy.

Morouer, Jeremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Juda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and your wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in deede.

Reethus haue ye sayde: We will not fayle, but do the thyng that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynke offringes to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, & hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne intentione. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Juda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, I haue sworne by my greate name (saith the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorow enymans mouth of Juda, in all the londe off Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plague them, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Juda that be in the lode of Egipte, shal perish with the swerde and with hunger, vntill they be utterly destroyed.

Neuertheles, those that fled awaye for yf swerde, shal come agayne into the lode of Juda (but there shal be very fewe of them) And all the remmaunt off Juda, that are gone in to Egipte, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shal be founde true: theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil visit you in this place (saith the LORDE) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perfourne my purpose vpon you, to punyssh you. Beholde (saith the LORDE) I wil deliuer Pharaos Ophiam kynge of Egipte in to the hondes of his enemies, yf seke after his life: even as I gaue Sedechias the kynge of Juda in to the hondes of Nabuchodonosor kyge of Babilon, which sought after his life.

The XLV. Chapter.

These are the wordes yf Jeremy the prophet spake vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias, after that he had writtenthese Sermons into a booke at the mouth of Jeremy, In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Juda.

Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORDE hath geuen me payne for my trauaile: I haue wecried my self wiffighing, and shall I fynde no rest: Therfore

The xlii. Chap. xliii.

retell him (O Jeremy) yf the LORDE saith thus: Beholde, The thinge that I haue buylded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole londe. And sekest thou yet promociō: Lokenot for it, and desyre it not. For I will bringe a miserable plage vpo all flesh, saith the LORDE. But thy life wil I geue thee for a pray, where so ever thou goest.

The XLVI. Chapter.

Here folowe the wordes off the LORDE to the prophet Jeremy, which he spake vnto the Gentiles. These wordes folowinge preached he to the Egiptians concernyng the hoost off Pharaos Necho kynge off Egipte, when he was in Charcamis besyde the water off Euphrates: what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon slew him, In the fourth yeare off Joachim the sonne off Josias kynge off Juda.

Ye make redy buckler and shylde, ye go forth to fight: Ree harnesse youre horses, & set youre selues vpon them: Re set youre salletes fast on, ye bunge forth speares, ye scourre youre swerdes, & put on youre brest plates.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so a frayd: why shiecke ye backe: wherefore are youre worthies slayne: Reethey runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon everychone off them, saith the LORDE. The lightest off fore shall not fle awaye, and the worthies shall not escape.

Towarde the north by the water of Euphrates they shall stamble and fall. But what is he this, that swelleth vp, as it were a floude, roaringe & raginge like the streames off water: It is Egipte that ryseth vp like the floude, and casteth out the waters with so greate noyse.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couerthe earth: we wil destroye yf cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to horse backe, roll forth yf Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with youre buclers, ye Libeans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORDE God of hoostes, a daye of vengeance, that he maye auēge him of his enemies. The swerde shal denoure, it shal be satisfied and bated in their bloude: For the LORDE God off hoostes shall haue a slayneoffringe towarde the North, by the water of Euphrates. Go vp (o Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the daughter off Egipte:

The prophet Jeremy.

But in wayne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The Lether shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shall be full of thy confucion: for one strengeman shall stamble vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

E These are the wordes that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremy, concerninge y^e hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babylon, which was to destroye the londe off Egypte: Preach out thow the londe of Egypte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stande still, make the redie, for the swerde shall consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie wor- thies are fallen: why stode they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greate, for one fell e- uer still vpon another. One cried vpon ano- ther: Up, let vs go agayne to oure owne peo- ple, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swerde of oure enemye.

E Crie euen there: O Pharaos kynge of E- gypte, the tyme will bunge sedicion. As tru- ly as I lyue (saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as y^e mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it sto- de in the see. O thou daughter of Egypte, make redy thy geer to flye. For Memphis shall e voyde and desolate, so that noma shall dwell therein. The londe of Egypte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forwarde. Hir wagi- ed souldyers that be with her, are like fat cal- ues.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a tremper. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come wth axes, as it were hewers downe of wod. And they shall cut downe hir wod (saith the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shal be no in nobie then the gresshep- pers, so that no man shalbe able to tell the. The daughter of Egypte shalbe confounded, whē she shalbe deliuered in to the bondes off the people off the north.

E Moreover thus saith the LORDE of hoos- tes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vy- set that restlessse peop^{le} off Alexandria, Pha- rao and Egypte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharaos, and all them y^e litten vnto him. Yee I will deliuer them into the bondes off those, that seke after their lyues: Namely, into the power off Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babylon, and in to the power off his seruantes. And after all these thinges, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saith the LORDE

But benot thou afrayed (o my seruant Jacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I wil helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuite. Jacob also shall co- me agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. Feare thou not (o Jacob my seruant) saith the LOR- DE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the. Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcte the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as o- ne that were faultlesse.

The XLVII. Chapter.

E These are the wordes, that the LOR- DE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet agaynst the phylistines, before that Pharaos smote the cite off Gaza. Thus sa- ieth the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate flonde, runnyng euer and coueryng the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noy- se and stampyng off their stronge barbed horses, at the shakynge off their charrettes, and at the remblinge off the wheelcs. The fathers shall not loke to their childien, so feable and weery shall their bondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to des- troye the whole londe off the phylistynes. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all pales- tina, and the other Jles, that be denyded fro the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Ga- za, Ascalon with hir ether valleys shall ke- pe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swer- de off the LORDE: Turne agayne in to y^e sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it cease, when the LORDE himself hath ge- uen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and ray- sed it vp agaynst the cities off the see co- ast?

Esa. 15. a Morouer I will make Moab cease (saith the LORDE) from the offrings and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherfore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my herte mourneth also, even as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

S All heades shall be shauen, and all beerdess clipped off: all hondes bounde, and all loynes gyded aboute with sack cloth. Vpō all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shalbe mournynge: For I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessell saith the LORDE. O how fearfull is she: O how mourneth she: O how doth Moab hange downe hir heade, and is ashamed: Thus shall Moab be a laughinge stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

Deu. 28. c
lere. 42. d For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, the enemye shal come flyenge as an Aegle, and spiede his wynges vpon Moab. They shall clynne ouer the walles, and wyne the stronge holdes. Then the mightymens herces in Moab, shalbe like the herte off a woman trauelinge with childe.

Esa. 24. c And Moab shalbe made so desolate, that she shal nomore be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Scare, pyt, and snare shal come vpō the (o Moab) saith the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shal be taken in the snare.

For I will bringe a yere off visitacion vpon Moab, saith the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shal stonde vnder the shadewe off Hesebon. For there shal go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, & shal burne vpon that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

We be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shal perish: Rec thy sonnes and doughters shal be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiue agayne, saith the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

Amos. 1. a AS concerninge the Ammonites, thus saith the LORDE: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heire? Why hath youre kynge then taken Gad in: wherfore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme cometh (saith I.

The xlix. Chap.

LORDE) that I will brynge a noyse off warre into Rabath off the Ammonites.

Labell shalbe desolate, and hir cities brent vp: and the Israelites shal be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saith the LORDE. Hesebon shal mourne, for it shal be roted out off the grounde, saith the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shal crie out, and gyde them selues with sack cloth: they shal mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shal be led awaye prisoner: yee his priestes and prynces with him.

Wherfore trustest thou in the water streames, that flowe to and fro, o thou fearce doughter: and thynkest thou art so safe (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shal come to the?

Beholde, I will brynge a feare vpon the, saith the LORDE God off hoostes, from all those that be aboute the: so that ye shal be scattered euery man frem another, and no mā shal gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiue agayne.

B Upon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hoostes spoken on this maner: Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned clene to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backes, crepe downe into the depe, O ye citiesyns off Dedan.

For I will brynge destructio vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. If the grape gatherers came vpon the, shuld they not leaue some grapes? If the night robbers came vpon the, shuld they not take so much, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discover his secretes, so that he shal not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neighbours, and he himself shal not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shal take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmete to drinke of the cuppe, haue dronken with the first: and thynkest thou then to be fre?

No, no thou shalt nether be quyte no fre, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my self (saith the LORDE) that Bosra shal become a wyldernes, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursynge: and hir cities shalbe a continuall deserte.

The prophet Jeremij.

For I am perfectly informed of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the hierthen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: I will make the but small amonge the heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomack z the pryde of thy herre haue disceaued y, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Neuertheles though thy nest were as hie as the Eagles, yet wil I cast the downe, saith the LORDE. Moreover Idumea shall be a wilderness: who so goeth by it, shalbe abashed, and wondre at all hir miserable plages. Like as Sedom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpsyde downe (saith y LORDE) so shal no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shal haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt medowes of Iordane vnto y grene pastures of Etha, so wil I dryue him, z make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordeine herto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that will stryue with me? What shepherde maye stonde in my hondes?

Therfore heare the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath taken vpon Idumea: z his purpose, that he hath deuysed vpon the cite syns of Theman: The leest of the flocke shal teare them in peces, z loke what fayre thynge they haue, they shal make it waiste, z them selues also. At the noyse of their fall y earth shal quake, the crie of their voyce shalbe heard vnto the reed see. Beholde, y enemye shall come and sle vp hither, like as it were an Eagle, z spiede his wynges vpon Bosra. Then shal the hertes of the worthies in Edom be as the herre of a woman traueling of childe. Upon Damascus, Hemath and Arphad shal come confucion, for they shal heare euell cydinges: they shal be tossed to and fro like the see that can not stonde still. Damascus shalbe sore a frayde, z shal sle, trembling shal come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shal ouer take her as a woman traueling of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? heare therefore: hir yonge men shal fall in the firetes, and all hir men of warre shal be cate awaye in that tyme, saith the LORDE of hoostes. I will kyndle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shal cosume the palace of Benadad.

As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Hasor, whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of

The l. Chap. Fo. xlv. i

Babilon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vnto Cedar, and destroye the people toward the easte. Their tentes and their flockes shal they take awaye, yce their hanginges and their vessell. Their Camels also shal they carie awaye with them. They shall come aboute them on euery syde with a fearfull crie.

Sle, get you soone awaye, crepe in to cannes, that ye maye dwell there: O ye inhabitants of Hasor, saith the LORDE: for Nabuchodonosor y kinge of Babilon hath holden a counsell concernynge you, z concluded his deuysce agaynst you. Arise, z get you vp agaynst yonder rich z carelesse people (saith the LORDE) which haue nether gates ner doore barres, z that dwell not together. Their Camels shalbe stollen, z the dromes of their catell dryuen awaye.

Moreover, these that be shauen wil I scatter towarde all the wyndes, z bringe them to destruction: yee z that thorow their owne familiers, saith the LORDE. Hasor also shal be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an everlastinge wilderness: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bunge the foure wyndes from y foure quarters of heauen, z wil scatter them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shal be no people, but some of Elam shal sle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be a frayde of their enemies, z of them that seke their lyues: z wil bunge vpo them the indignacion of my wrath, saith the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kinge z y prynces from thence, saith the LORDE. But in processe of tyme, I wil bunge Elam out of captiuite agayne, saith the LORDE.

The L. Chapter.
The wordes y the LORDE spake vnto the prophet Jeremy, concernynge Babilon, z the londe of the Caldees: Preach amonge the Gentiles, let youre voyce be heard, make a toke: crie out, kepe no sylence, but saye: Babilon shal be wonne, Bel shalbe confounded, and Merodach shalbe ouercome.

The prophet Jeremy.

Yet their goddesses shall be brought to shame, and their ymages shall stonde in feare. For out of the north there shall come a people agaynst her, which shall make hir londe so waiste, that no body shall dwell therein: neither man nor beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes & at that tyme (saith the LORD) the children of Israel shall come, they & the children of Juda, weeping & makinge haire, & shall seke the LORD their God. They shall aye the waye to Sion, thither shall they turne their faces, & come, and hang vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shall be broken.

My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceaued them, & haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, & forgotten their folde. All they yf came vpon them, haue deuoured the: & their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORD, yee euen the LORD which is the beuotie of their rightuousnes, & yf defended their fathers. Yet shall ye fle from Babilon, & departe out of yf londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from yf northern londe, & bunge them vpon Babilon: these shall laye sege to it, & wyne it: Their arrows shall not mysse, like as a connyng archer shunteth not wronge. And the Caldees shall be spoyled, & all they that spyle them, shall be satisfied, saith the LORD: because ye were so chearfull & glad, to treade downe myne heretage, & fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calves in the grasse: and triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shall be sore confounded, and they that bare you, shall come to shame. She shall be the leest fet by amonge the nations, vyode, waiste, & dried vp. No man shall be able to dwell there, for the feare of yf LORD, but she shall be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, shall stonde still, & be abashed, & shall wondre at all hir plagues.

Go forth in yo^r araye agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all yf that can handle bowes: shute as her, spare no arrows, for she hath synned agaynst the LORD. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her rounde aboute: she shall yelde her selfe, her foundations shall fall, & hir walles shall come downe, for it shall be the vengeance of the LORD. Yee vengeance shall be taken of her, & as she hath done, so shall she be dealt withall. They shall rote out the sower from Babilon, & him yf handlet

the sickle in harvest. For feare of the swerde of the enemye, every man shall get him to his owne people, & every man shall sie to his owne londe. Israel is a scattered flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon hath brused all their bones.

Therefore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will viset the kinge of Babilon & his kingdome, as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bunge Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Charnel & Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim & Galaad. In these dayes and at the same tyme (saith the LORD) yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shall none be founde: Yf men enquire for the synne of Juda, there shall be none: for I will be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne ouer.

Go downe (o thou avenger) into the enemies londe, & viset them that dwell therein: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saith the LORD: do accordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter & greete murther, namely on this maner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken & brused in sonder? How chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wilderness amonge the heithen on this maner? I myself haue layed wayte for the, & thou art taken: vnawares art thou trapped & snared: for why, thou hast prouoked yf LORD vnto anger: The LORD hath opened his house of ordinaunce, & brought forth the weapons of his wrath. For the thinge that is done in the londe of the Caldees, it is the LORD of hostes worke.

These thinges shall come vpon her at the last, they shall breake into hir prieny chambers, they shall leane her as bare as stones, that be layed together vpon heapes. They shall so destroye her, yf no thinge shall be left. They shall slaye all hir mightie souldyers, and put them to death. Wo be vnto the, for the daye & tyme of their visitacion is at hande. Me thinke I heare already a crie, of them that be fled & escaped out of the londe of Babilon, which shewe in Sion the vengeance of the LORD our God, the vengeance of his temple: Yee a voyce of them, that crie agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, pyth youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. Apoc. 18 b her, as she hath deserved: and accordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORDE, agaynst y^e holy one of Israel. Therefore shal hir yongemen fall downe in the stretes, & all hir men of warre shal be roted out in y^e daye, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I speake vnto the (o thou proude) saith the LORDE God of hostes: for thy daye shal come, cu^e the tyme of y^e visitaciō. And the proude shal stum- ble & fall, & no man shal helpe him vp. I wil burne vp his cities with fyre, & it shal consume all that is rounde aboute him.

Ihus saith the LORDE of hostes: The children of Israel & Iuda suffre violence to- gether. All they that haue them in capti- uityte, kepe them fast, & wil not let them go: but their avenge & redemer is mightie, whose na- me is the LORDE of hostes: he shal man- trayne their cause, he shal make the londe sha- ke, & iudge them that dwell therein, one with another. The swearde shal come vpon the Caldees (saith the LORDE) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their princes, & vpon their wyse mē: The swearde vpon their soyth sayers, (as for those, they shal become foo- les.) The swearde vpon their worthies, so that they shal stonde in fāre: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, & vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder hē: so that they all shal become like women: The swear- de vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stol- len awaye: The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shal be dued vp: For the londe woishippeth ymages, & delyteth in straun- ge wondrous full chinges. Therefore shal wilde beestes, Apes & Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, neither shal eny man haue his habitacion there for ever- more. Like as God destroyed Sodom & Go- more, with the cities that laye there abou- te, saith the LORDE: So shal no man dwell there also, neither shal eny mā haue there his habitacion. Beholde, there shal come a peo- ple from the north, with a greace bonde of men, & many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes & buc- lers, cruell are they & vnmereifull.

Ihus their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, & come weaponed to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his hondes shal waxe feable: Sorowe and heynes shal come vpon him, as a woman trauelinge with childe. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt me- dows of Iordane vnto the grene pastures of Ethan, so wil I dryue hē forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, & ordene to sōch thinge? For who is like me, or who wil stryue with me: or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me? Therefo- re heare the counsell that the LORDE hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the deuyceth that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The loest amōge the people shal teare them in peces, & loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue: they shal laye it waist. The noyse at y^e wyngynge of Babilon shal moue the earth, & the crie shal be herde amonge the Gētiles.

The LI. Chapter.

Ihus hath the LORDE sayde: Behol- de, I will rayse vp a perlonis wynde agaynst Babilon & hir citezens, y^e beare euell will agaynst me. I wil sende also in to Babi- lō fanners, to fanne her out, & to destroye hir londe: for in the daye of hir trouble they shal be aboute her on euery syde. Moreover, the LORDE hath sayde vnto the bowe men, & to them y^e clymme ouer the walles in brest pla- ces: Ye shal not spare hir yongemē, & yll dow- ne all hir hoost. Thus the slayne shal fall downe in the londe of the Caldees, and the wounded in the stretes. As for Israel & Ju- da, they shal not be forsake of their God, of the LORDE of hostes, of the holy one of Is- rael: no, though they haue fylled all their lon- de full of synne. Sle awaye from Babilon, euery man saue his life. Let no man holde his cunge to his wickednes, for the tyme of the LORDES vengeance is come, yee he shal re- warde her agayne. Babilon hath bene in the LORDES honde a golden cuppe, y^e maketh all londes droncken. Of hir wyne haue all peo- ple droncken, therefore are they out of their wittes. But sodenly is Babilon fallen, and destroyed. Mourn for her, brynge plasters for hir woundes, yf she maye peradventure be healed agayne. We wolde haue made Ba- bilon whole (saye they) but she is not recone- red. Therefore wil we let her alone, & go euery mā into his owne countre. For hir iudgmēt is come in to heauen, & is gone vp to the clou- des. And therefore come on, we will shewe Sion the worke of the LORDE oure God.

Make sharpe the arrows, and fyll the quyners: for the LORDE shal rayse vp the spere of the kynge of the Medes, which hath already a desyre to destroye Babi- lon. This shal be the vengeance of the LOR- DES, and the vengeance of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babi- lon, make youre watch stronge, set yo^r watch- men in aray, yee holde prienye watches: & yet

O thou that dwellest by the greete waters, o thou that hast so greete treasure and riches, thyne ende is come: & the rekenyng of thy wynnynge. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworn by himself, that he wil ouerwhelme the with men like greshoppers in nombre, which with a courage shall crie Alarum Alarum agaynst the. Yee even the LORDE of hoostes, that with his power made the earth, with his wysdome prepayred y^e rounde worlde, & with his discrecion spred out the heauens. As soone as he letteth his voyce be herde, the waters in the aye were scarce: he draweth vp the cloudes from the endes of the earth. he turneth y^e lightenynges to rayne, he bringeth the wyndes out of their secreete places. By the reason of wysdome, all men are become fooles. Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for y^e thinge that they make, is but disceate, & hath no breath. Wayne is it, & worthy to be laughed at: & in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Jacob is no ne soch: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the redde of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, & yet thou row the I have scatted the nacions & kyngdomes: Thou row the haue I scatted horse & horseman, yee the charettes, & soch as sat vpon them: Thou row the I haue scatted man & woman, olde and yonge, bachelor & mayden. Thou row the I haue scatted the shepherde & his flocke, the husbandman & his carell, the prynces & the rulers. Therefore wil I rewarde the cite of Babilon & all hir citsyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noy some hill) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my hande ouer the, & cast the downe from the stony rockes: & wil make the a brente hill, so that ne ther corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shal be taken eny more out of the but waiste & desolate shalt thou lie foreuer more, saith the LORDE.

E Set vp a toke in the londe: blowe the trompettes amonge the heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Menni & Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greete a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them y^e people of the Meedes wth their kynges, prynces & all their chiefe rulers, yee and the whole londe that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake & be afayed, when the denyce of the LORDE shal come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waiste, that no mā shal dwell eny moertherin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leane the batell, & kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shal be like women. Their dwellinge places shal be brent vp, their barres shal be broken. One pursenaunt shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kinge of Babilon tydinges: that his cite is taken in on enery syde, the foordes occupyde, the fennes brent vp, and the souldyers fore afayed.

S Forthus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: The daughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a thieffishinge floore, but shortly shal hir haruest come. Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. he swallowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicacies: he hath cast me out, he hath takē my substance awaye, & the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saith the daughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee & my blonde also, vnto the Caldees, saith Ierusalem. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, & drye vp hir water sprynges.

Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwellinge place for dragons, a fearfulnes & wondringe, because no man dwelleth there. They shal roare together like lyons, & as the yongelyons when they be angrie, so shal they bede them selues. In their heare I shal set drynke before the, & they shal be droncken for ioye: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Sefah wonne? O, how was the glory of y^e whole londe taken? how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondred at amonge the heithen? The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath couered her with his greete waves. hir cities are layed waiste, the londe lieth vnbuylded and voyde: it is a londe, where no man dwelleth, & where no mā traueleth thorow. Moreover, I wil vyset Bel at Babilon: & the thinge that he hath swallowed vp, that same shal I plucke out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shal

O my people, come out of Babilon, that euery man maye saue his life, from the fearfull wrath of the LORDE. Be not faynte herred, & feare not at euery rumoure that shalbe herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydings, yee strange wickednes and lordshipe. And lo, the tyme cometh that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilō, and the whole londe shalbe confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. Heauen and earth with all that is therein, shal reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saiech y LORDE.

Apoc. 18.c

Iere. 50.c

Like as Babilō hath beaten downe and slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the swerde, haist you, stōde not still, remembre the LORDE a farre off, and thinke vpon Jerusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were couered with shame, because the straunge aleauntes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherfore beholde (saiech the LORDE) the tyme cometh, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lōde they shal mourne and fall. Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saiech the LORDE.

Iere. 49.d

A piteous crie shal be herde from Babilon, and a greate mysery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryueth out the hie stomack & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the waves of greate water floudes, and made greate crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shal come vpon her (even vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence the. Yee (saiech the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chiefe rulers & all their worthies, droncke: so that they shal slepe an everlasting slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saiech the kinge, whose name is y LORDE of hoostes.

Moreover, thus saiech the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shalbe brente vp. And the thing that the Gētiles and the people haue wrought with greate trauayle and labour, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

The liij. Chap. Ho. xliiij.

This is the charge that Jeremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Maasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable prynce. Jeremy wrote in a booke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be witten agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this place, so that nether people nether catell shal dwell there eny more, but to lie waiste for ever: and when thou hast redde out the booke, bynde a stone to it, and cast it in the myddest of Euphrates, and saye: Euē thus shal Babilon syncke, & be thrust downe with the burthen of trouble, that I will bringe vpon her: so that she shal neuer come vp agayne. Thus farre are y preachinges of Jeremy.

The liij. Chap.

Sedechias was xxi. yeare olde, when he was made kyng, & he reigned xxi. yeare in Jerusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Jeremes daughter of Lobna. He lyued wickedly before the LORDE enen as Joachim dyd. Wherfore the LORDE was angrie at Jerusalem & Iuda, so longe till he had cast the out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kyng of Babilon. But in y. yeare of his raigne, In the tenth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon with all his hooste came before Jerusalem, & beseged it, & made them bulwokes rounde aboute it. And this beseginge of the cite endured vnto the xxi. yeare of kyng Sedechias.

4. Reg. 25. 1

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix. daye of the Moneth, there was so greate hunger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the poite betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now y Caldees had compassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye to ward the wilderness.

Iere. 39. 15
39. 2

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kinge in the felde of Jericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kyng awaye prisoner to Reblatha, vnto the kinge of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, where he gaue iudgment vpon him.

sonnes he slayne before his face, yee 7 put all the prynces of Juda to death at Reblatha. Moreover he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be carried vnto Babilon: 7 let him lie in prison, till he dyed.

Now y^e tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xixth yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne and the kynge of Babilons seruantes came vnto Jerusalem, 7 brent vp the house of the LORD. He brent vp also the kynges palace, all the houses 7 all the gorgeous buyldinges in Ierusalē. And the whole hoost of the Caldees y^e were with the chiefe captayne, brake downe all the walles of Jerusalem rounde aboute.

T As for the poore people 7 soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kynge of Babilon, yee 7 what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne caried them awaye prisoners. But y^e poore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne leave in the ionde, to occupie the vynyardes 7 feldes. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORD, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of y^e LORD: 7 caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, spinklers, spones 7 all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, spinklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and sonne of syluer.

D The chiefe captayne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes y^e stode vnder y^e seate, which kynge Salomon made in the house of the LORD: 7 all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, 7 the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, 7 foure fingers thicke and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, 7 euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: 7 vpon the knoppes were whoopes, 7 pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasse.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundred and xviij, which han ged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chiefe captayne also toke Sarias y^e hie prest, 7 Sophonias that was chiefe next him, and the thre keepers of the treasury. He toke out of the cite a chamberlayne which was a captayne of the souldyers, 7 seven men that were the kynges seruantes, which were founde in the cite: 7 Sepher a captayne that used to muster the men of warre: with lx men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne toke, 7 caried them to the kynge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kynge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the Ionde of Remach. And thus Juda was ledde awaye captayne, out of his owne Ionde.

This is the summe of the people,
whom Nabuchodonosor ledde awaye captayne.

In the seventh yeare of his reigne, he carried awaye of y^e Iewes, thre thousande thre and twenty. In the xviij yeare Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Jerusalem eight hundredth 7 xxxij personnes. In the xxij yeare of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne, toke awaye seven hundredth xlv Iewes prisoners. The whole summe of all the prisoners, is foure thousande and sex hundredth.

In the xxxviij yeare after that Joachim the kynge of Juda was caried awaye in the xxi daye of the xij Moneth, Evilmerodach kynge of Babilon (the same yeare y^e he reigned) gaue Joachim the kynge of Juda his pardon, and let him out of prison, and spake louyngly to him: And set his trone aboue y^e trones of the other kynges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the clothes of his prison, yee and he ate with him all his lifelonge. And he had a continuall luyngge geuen him of the kynge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge allowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

The Lamenta- cions of Jeremy.

And it came to passe after Israel was brought into captiuyte, and Jerusalem destroyed: that Jeremy the prophet sat wepinge, mournynge and makin-ge his mone in Jerusalem: so that wth an heuy herte he sighed, & sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

As, how sitteth the cite so desolate, & some tyme was full of people: how is she become like a wedowe, which was the lady of all nacions: how is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londres?

a. Re 4. b
4. Re. 15. a

She wepeth sore in the night, so that y^e teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her eny comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre
her, & are become hir enemies.

Juda is taken presoner, because she was defyled: & for seruyng so many straunge god-des, she dwelleth now amonge the heithen.
She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted
her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man cometh more to the solempne feastes:
All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heuynesse.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, &
haue put her to shame: because the LORDE
hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes:
hir children are ledde awaye captiue before their enemye.

Isa. 35. a

All the bewtie of the doughter of Sion is awaye, hir prynces are become like wethers, that fynde no pasture. They are dry-ue awaye before their enemye, so that they haue no more power.

How doth Jerusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery & disobedience, yee the ioye & pleasure y^e she hath had in tymes past: seynge hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemye, & there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lookinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Jerusalem synned euery more & more, therfore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylchinesse. Yee she sigheth, and is a shamed of herselfe.

Hir slaytes are defyled, she remembred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. O LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemye hath the vpper honde.

The enemye hath put his honde to all the precious thinges that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (neuertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregacion.

Deu. 23. a

All hir people seke their bried with heuynes, & loke what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

2. Re. 6. f
Tren. 2. c

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wher with the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre,
in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The yocke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath deliuered me into those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myself.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mighty men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best wē. The LOR-DE hath troden downe the doughter of Juda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gus-she out of water: for the cōforter that shul-de quyen me, is farre frome. My children are dryuen awaye, for why? the enemye hath gotten the ouer honde.

y
Isa. 44. c
Tren. 2. c

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Jacob, and Jerusalem is as it were a menstruous
woman, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue prouoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considre my heuynesse:
My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuyte.

Dan. 9. a

I called for my louers (but they begyled me:) for my prestes and counclers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Considre (O LORDE) how I am troubled,
my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth about in me, and I am full of heuynesse. The swearde hurteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

W They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt brynge forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

N From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, such as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The II. Chapter.

2 QUas, how hath y^e LORDE darkened the doughter of Sion so sore in his wiath? As for the honoure of Israel, he hath casten it downe from heauen: how happeneth it, that he remembred not his owne fore stole, when he was angrie?

Tren. 4. b

1. Par. 19. a

Psal 98. a

3 The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Jacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the doughter Juda hath he broken in his wiath, & throwne them downe to the grounde: his kyngdome & his prynces hath he suspended.

4 In the wiath of his indignacion he hath broken all the home of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enemy: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Jacob, & hath consumed vp all rounde aboute.

5 He hath bent his bowe like an enemy, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and enery thinge that was pleasaunt to se, he hath smytten it downe. He hath poured out his wiath like a fyre, into the tabernacle of the doughter Sion.

6 The LORDE is become, like as it were an enemy, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the doughter of Juda wth much sorow and heynesse.

7 Which tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: his solēpne feastes hath he put downe. The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the his solēpne feastes and Sabbathes in Sion, are clene forgotte. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kyng & prestes to be despised.

1. Par. 19. b

8 The LORDE hath forsaken his owne aulter, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres into the hondes of the enemy. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solēpne feast daye.

9 The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the doughter Sion, he spred out his lyne, & drew nee in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therfore mourneth the turrets and the broken walles together.

10 His portes are casten downe to the grounde, his barres are broken & smytten in sonder: his kyng & prynces are caried awaye to the Gētiles. They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

1. Par. 19. b

1. Par. 19. b

11 The Senatours of the doughter Sion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strowed ashes vpon their heades, and gyrded them selues with sackcloth. The maydens of Jerusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

1. Par. 19. c

12 Myne eyes begynne to sayle me therow wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leuer is poured vpon the earth, for the greate hurte of my people, seynge the children and babes dyd sworne in the stretes of the cite.

Tren. 1. a

13 Euen when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and some dyed in their mothers bosome.

1. Par. 19. d

14 What shal I saye of the (O thou doughter Jerusalem) to whom shal I like the? To whom shal I compare the (O thou doughter Sion) to comforte the withall? Thy hurte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

1. Par. 19. e

15 Thy prophetes haue looked out vayne & foolish thinges for the, they haue not shewed the of thy wickednesse, to kepe the from captiuite: but haue overladen the, and thorough falsedescatred the abroad.

1. Par. 19. f

1. Par. 19. g

1. Par. 19. h

16 All they that go by the, clappe their hondes at the: hissinge and wagginge their heades vpon the doughter Jerusalem, and saye: is this the cite that men call so sayre, wherein the whole londe reioysseth?

1. Par. 19. i

17 All thine enemies gape vpon the, whisperinge and bytinge their teeth, sayenge: let vs denoure, for the tyme that we looked for, is come: we haue founde and sene it.

18 The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge, that he was purposed to do: and performed that he had denyed longe ago: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused thine aduersary to tryumphe ouer the, and set vp the home of thine enemy.

1. Par. 19. j

19 Let thine hert crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the doughter Sion: let thy teares rūne downe like a ryuer daye & night: rest not, & let not the aple of thine eye leaue of.

1. Par. 19. k

1. Par. 19. l

1. Par. 19. m

20 Stonde vp, and make thy prayer in the first watch of the night, poure out thine hert like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine hondes, for the lyues of thy yonge children, that dye of hunger in the stretes.

1. Par. 19. n

1. Par. 19. o

The Lamentacions of Jeremy. Chap. iij. Fo. l.

Beholde (O LORDE) & conside, why hast thou gathered me vp so clene? Shal the women then eate their owne frute, even children of a spanne longe? Shal the prestes and prophetes be slayne thus in the Sanctuary of the LORDE?

Yonge & olde lye behinde the stretes vpon the grounde, my maydens & yonge men are slayne with the swerde: whom thou in the daye of thy wrothfull indignacion hast put to death: Yee enen thou hast put them to death, & not spared them.

My neighbours that are rounde aboute me, hast thou called, as it were to a feast daye: so that in the daye of the LORDES wroth none escaped, nether was eny left behinde. Those that I had brought vp & nourished, hath myne enemy destroyed.

The III. Chapter.

I Am the man, that (thorow the rodd of his wroth) haue experie of misery. He drewe me forth, and led me: yee into darcknesse, but not into light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, & layeth it ener vpon me.

My flesh & my synne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brused.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, & closed me in with gall and trauaile.

He hath set me in darcknesse, as they that be deed for ever.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, & hath layed heuy lynces vpon me.

Though I crie & call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stopped vp my wayes with fouresquared stones, & made my pathes croked.

He layeth waite for me like a Beere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and broke me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a mark to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyer hath he shot, euen into my reynes.

I am laughed to scorne of all my people, they make songes vpon me all y daye longe.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, & geuen me wormwood to drynke.

He hath smytten my teth in peces, & rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope for me in the LORDE.

O remembre yet my misery and my trouble, the wormwood and the gall.

Yee thou shalt remembre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whyle I conside these thinges in my hert, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, & that his longynge kyndnesse ceassech not.

His faithfulness is greate, and reneweth it self as the moynynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saith my soule) therfore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto the, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seeketh after him?

O how good is it with stillnesse to waite and tarie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (percase) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheeke to the smyter, he will be content with repones.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for ever.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to y multitude of his mercies) he receaureth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, & cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the prisoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To moue the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in such thinges.

What is he then that saith: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES commaundement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherfore them murmureth the lyuinge man: let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs loke well vpon oure owne waies, & remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to y LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hondes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers & haue offended, wilt thou therfore not be increated?

Thou hast covered vs in thy wroth, & persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the heithen.

They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we can not go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.

Oure persecuters are swifter then the Agles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in y wilderness.

The very breth of oure mouth: euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe takē in oure synnes, of whom we saye: Under his shadowe we shalbe preserued amonge the heithen.

Und thou (O daughter Edom) that dwel lest in the londe of hus, be glad and reioyce: for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be dronckē.

Thy synne is wel punished (O thou daughter Sion) he shall not suffre the to be caried awaye any more. But thy wickednesse (O daughter Edom) shall be vyset, and for thy synnes sake, he shal lede the into captiuite.

The V. Chapter.

All to remēbraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure enheritaunce is turned to the straungers, & oure houses to the aleauntes. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure neckes are vnder persecution, we are weery, and haue no rest.

Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bried ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, & we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauntes haue the rule of vs, and no man belyueth vs out of their hōdes. We must get of lyuyng with the parellof outelyues, because of the drouth of the wilderness.

Oure stryng is as it had bene brent in an oven, for very sore hunger. The wyues are rauished in Sion, & the maydens in the cities of Juda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vse no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

Therfore oure hert is full of heynesse, & oure eyes dymme: because of y hill of Sion that is destroyed, In somoch, that the foresonne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that re maynest for euermore, and thy seate woulde with out ende: Wherfore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longer? O LORDE: Turnethou vs vnto the, & so shal we be turned. Renue o' daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and be ne sore displeased at vs.

What Baruch conteyneth.

Chap. I. Baruch readeth the booke before the kynge and all the people, which sende money to Jerusalem.

Chap. II. They knowlege, that they haue deserued punishment: God promyseth them forgiveness.

Chap. III. They praye hartely beinge in prison, and he exorteth them to amende.

Chap. IIII. A sermon to the people, with an exortacion to patience.

Chap. V. He comforteth them, and sheweth the vocation of the heithen.

Chap. VI. A copie of the epistole, that Jeremy sent to the Jewes, which were led awaye prisoners vnto Babilon.

These are the wordes of the booke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fisch yeare the seuēth daye of the moneth: what tyme as the Caldees waime Jerusalem and brent it.

4-Reas.b

The prophet Baruch.

The first Chapter.

And Baruch dyd rede the wordes of this booke, that Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kynge of Juda might heare: and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the booke: yee and before all the noble kinges sonnes, before y^e lordes of the counsell and elders: and before the whole people, from y^e lowest vnto the hiest: before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by y^e water of Eodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

B They made a colleccion also of money, accordinge to euery mans pener, and sent it to Jerusalem vnto Joachim the sonne of Zedechias the sonne of Salon prest, with y^e other prestes: and to all the people which were wth him at Jerusale, what tyme as they had gotten the ornamentes of the temple of y^e LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might bringe them agayne in to the londe of Juda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban: namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had take Jechonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captyue from Jerusalem vnto Babilon.

C And they sayde: Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burnt offerynges and incense withall: make you vnteuened bred, & offere for synne vpon the altier of the LORDE oure God. And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne: y^e their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen: that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes: that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne: that we maye longe do them seruyce, and fynde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this booke (which we haue sent vnto you to be rehearsed in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hye dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

D Thus shal ye saye: The LORDE o^r God is rightuous, but we are worthy of cofusion & shame: like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Juda, & to euery one y^e dwelleth at Jerusalem: to o^r kinges, prynces, prestes, pro-

The ij. Chap.

phetes & to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egypte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a mysbelcuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto y^e LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues vtterly, and shrenkinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

Wherfore there are come vpon vs greates plagis & dyuerse curses, like as the LORDE deuysed by Moses his seruait: which brought oure forefathers out of the lode of Egypte, to geue vs a lode, that floweth with mylke and honny, like as it is to se this daye. Nevertheless, we haue not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man followed his owne mynde and wicked ymaginacion: to offere vnto straunge goddes, and to be enel in the sight of the LORDE oure God.

The II. Chapter.

F Or the which cause the LORDE oure God hath perfourmed his denyce, wherof he certified vs, and oure hea des that ruled in Jerusale: yee and oure kyn ges, eue prynces, with all Israel and Juda. And soch plagis hath y^e lord brought vpon vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauē: like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, accordinge as it is witten in the lawe of Moses: that a man shulde eate y^e flesh of his owne sonne, & the flesh of his owne daughter. Moreover, he hath deliuered them in to the bondes of all the kinges, y^e are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) & scattered the abroad in all londes & nacids. Thus are we brought beneth & not aboue, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE o^r God, & not bene obedient vnto his voyce. Therefore y^e LORDE o^r God is rightuous, & we with o^r fathers (as reason is) are brought to open shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plagis y^e are come vpon vs already, y^e LORDE had denyced the for vs: yet wolde we not praye vnto y^e LORDE oure God, y^e we might euery mā turne fro his vngodly wayes. So y^e LORDE hath caused soch plagis to come vpon vs, for he is rightuous in all his wordes, which he hath commaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner harkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in y^e commaundementes of y^e LORDE, y^e he had geue vnto vs.

The prophet Baruch.

The iij. Chap. Fo. liij.

And now O LORD God of Israel, thou that hast brought thy people out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, with tokens and wonders, with thy great power and outstretched arm: and hast gotten thyself a name, as it is come to passe this day: O LORD our God, we have sinned, we have done wickedly, we have behaved our selves ungodly in all thy righteousnesses. Turne thy wrath from us (we beseeche thee) for we are but a few left amonge the heathen, where thou hast scattered us. Heare O prayers (O LORD) & our petitions, bunge us out of captivity, for thine owne sake: get us fauoure in the sight of thee, which haue led us awaye: yf all lodes maye knowe, that thou art the LORD our God, and that Israel and his generation calleth vpon thy name.

O LORD, loke downe from thy holy house vpon us: encline thine eare, & heare us. For the deed, yf be gone downe to their graues, & whose soules are out of their bodies, ascribe vnto the LORD nether prayse nor righteousness: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which geeth on heuely and weakely, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule as crybeth prayse and righteousness vnto the LORD. O LORD, we poure out our prayers before thee, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORD our God: not for any godlynesse of our forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath & indignacion vpon us: accordinge as thou dydest threaten us, by thy seruantes the prophetes, sayenge:

Thus sayeth the LORD: Bowe downe youre shulders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remaine still in the lande, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. If ye will not do this, ner heare the voyce of yf LORD your God, to serue the kynge of Babilon: I shall destroye you in the cities of Iuda, within Ierusalem and without. I will also take from you the voyce off myrth and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the bryde to me and the voyce of the bryde, and there shal no man dwell more in the lande. But they wolde not hearken vnto thy voyce, to do the kynge of Babilon seruyce: and therfore hast thou performed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruantes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of our kynges and the bones of our fathers shulde be translated out of their place.

And lo, now are they layde out in the heat of yf Sonne, & in the celdes of yf night, and deyd in greete mysery: wth hunger, wth swear-de, wth pestilence & are clene cast forth. As for the temple wherein thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it wast, as it is to se this daye: & yf for the wickednes of the house of Israel & the house of Iuda. O LORD O^r God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes & accordinge to all yf greete louinge mercy of thine, like as thou spakest by thy seruante Moses, in the daye when thou didest comaund him, to wyre thy lawe before the children of Israel, sayenge: If ye will not hearken vnto my voyce, the shal this greete multitude be turned into a very smal people, for I wil scatter the abroad. Not withstandinge I am sure, that this folke will not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. But in yf lode of their captivitye, they shal remembre them selues, & lerne to knowe, yf I am the LORD their God: when I geue thee an herte to vnderstande, & eares to heare. Then shal they prayse me in the lode of their captivitye, & thynke vpon my name. Then shal they turne them from their harde backes, & from their ungodlynes: Then shal they remembre the thynges, yf happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne into the lande, which I promised wth an ooth vnto their fathers: Abrahā, Isaac & Jacob: & they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace thee, and not minyssh thee. And I wil make another couenaunt with them: soch one as shal endure for ener: namely, yf I will be their God, and they shal be my people: and I wil nemoie dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the lande yf I haue geue thee.

The iij. Chapter.

And now O LORD almighty, thou God of Israel: O soule yf is in trouble, & O spere yf is vexed, crieth vnto thee: heare us (O LORD) & haue pite vpon us, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto us, for we haue synned before yf. Thou endurest for ever, shulde we the vtterly perishe: O LORD almighty, thou God of Israel: heare now yf prayer of yf deed Israelites & of their children, which haue synned before yf, & not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORD their God, for the which cause these plagues hange now vpon us. O LORD, remembre not yf wickednes of O^r forefathers, but thinke vpon thy power & name now at this tyme: for thou art yf LORD O^r God, & yf (O LORD) wil we prayse. For thou hast put yf feare in O^r hartes, to yf intet yf we shulde call vpon yf name, & prayse yf in our captivitye: and yf we might turne from the wickednesse of our forefathers, yf synned before thee.

Where are y prynces of the heithen become, and soch as ruled the bestes vpon the earth? They that had their pastyme with the foules of the ayre, they that loded vpon syluer and golde (wherin men trust so much) and made no ende of their gatherynge: What is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and conde not bunge their workes to passe? Ierusalem, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that cometh vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsaken, and that were scatred abroad) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Arise O Ierusalem, stōte vpon hye: loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, hauynge God in remembraunce. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shal the LORD bringe them caried with honoure, as children off y^e kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute mountaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fyll the valleys, & so to make them eauen with the grounde: y^e Israel maye be diligēt to lyue vnto y^e honoure of God. The prophet Baruch.

A copie off the epistle, that Jeremy the prophet did sende vnto the Jewes, which were led awaye prisoners by the kynge of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was commanded him of God.

The VI. Chapter.

Ier 35. a, b Because of the synnes that ye have done agaynst God, ye shal be led awaye captiue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remayne there many yeares, and for a longe season: namely, viij. generacions: & after that wil I bunge you awaye peaceably from thence. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of woodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulness before the heithen. But loke that ye do not as the ocher: be not ye afrayed, and let not the feare of them overcome you.

Deu. 6. c Therfore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORD, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped: Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddes, yf carpenter hath polished them: yee gylted be they, & layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench yf loueth paramours is trynly dectre, euen so are these made & hanged wth golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddes vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vse: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, & trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and dectre their goddes therewith. Yet can not these goddes deliuer them selues from rust and mothes. Whē they haue couered them with clothyng of purple, they wype their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof there is moche amonge thē. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he wete iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swerde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murthers.

C By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therfore se yf ye nether worshipe them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel yf a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddes. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as yf doores are shut in roode aboute vpon him, yf hath offended the kynge: Was it were a deed body kepte besyde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepte the doores with barres and lockes, lest their goddes be spoyled with robbers. They set vp candles before thē (yee verely and yf many) wherof they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, yf the serpentes and womes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke yf is in the temple. The oules, swallowes & byrdes sit vpon them, yee and the cattes runne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast in to a fourme, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens shulders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothyng worth. Confounded be they then, that worshipe them. For yf they fall to the ground, they can not ryse vp agayne of thē selues: Neethough one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, & abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the mistiuous laye bondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore be not ye afrayde of them. From whence cometh it thē, that they be called goddes? The women sit before the goddes of syluer, golde and woodde, and the prestes sit in their temples, hauyng open clothes, whose heades and beerdes are shauen, and haue nothinge vpon their heades: roaringe and cryenge vpon their goddes, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garmentes of the ymages, and dectre their wyues & children withall. Whether it be good or euell yf eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kynge, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them & kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe any mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to y fetherles. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde z syluer, are but even as other stones, y be hewē of y mountayne. They y wo:shipe thē, shal be cōfounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē goddes? And though the caldees wo:shiped thē not, hearinge y they were but domme z coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre unto Bel, and wolde sayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude sele, y maye not mooue. But when these mē come to understōdinge, they shall forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greatesorte off women gyrded with coardes, syt in the stretes, z burne olyue beries. Now yf one off them be conveyed awaye, z lye w^t any soch as come by: she casteth hir neighburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ad lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, y they are goddes? Carpenters z goldsmithes make thē, nether be they any other thinge, but even what the worke men wil make of them. See the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thinges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therfore are the thinges (ye very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth any warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, where they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner deliuer thē from mys fortune? For seyng they be but of wodd, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people z kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shal be openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mē hōdes, z that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe frō wronge: For they are not able to do so much as a crowe, that flyeth betwixt heuen and earth.

When there happeneth a fyre into the house of those goddes of wodd, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape z saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balles therin. They can not withstōde any kyng or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Moreover, these god-

des of wodd, of stone, of golde z syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee y very wicked are stronger thē they. These strype them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde z syluer frō thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therefore it is much better for a man, to be a kinge z so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherein he y oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a doore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therein: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mōne z all the starres when they geue their shynynge light, are obedient, z do men good: When the lightenyng glisteth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, z when God cōmaunderth the clondes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe frō aboue z cōmaunded, it burneth vpon hilles ad woddes: But as for these goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strength. Wherefore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seyng they cā nether geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so much now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for y zeichen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mōne: yee y vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rose, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therfore feare thē not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepech nothinge, euen so are the ir goddes of wodd, of syluer z golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with these goddes of wodd, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ad soone saydeth awaye, ye maye understonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greates cōfucion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, y hath no ymages z wo:shippeth none, for he shal be farre from reprose.

The first Chapter.

Ezechiel, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the prisoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, & I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kynge Iochims captiuyte. At the same tyme came y^e worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpo him. And I loked: & beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greace cloude full of fyre, which wth his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in y^e myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the licnesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sauyng, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

Their legges were straight, but their fete were like bullockes fete, and they glistred, as it had bene fayre scoured metall. Under their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and the ir wynges were toward the foure couers: yet were the wynges so, that one euer touched another. When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forward.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the fa off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out about: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Enery one when it wente, it wente straight forward.

Where as the spiece led them, thither they wente, and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenance of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge vresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whē y^e beestes wete forward & backward, one wolde hane thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earch with foure faces also like the beestes.

The fashion & worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forward, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute iⁿ their goynge. They were large, great and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whē the beestes wete, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes list them selues vp from y^e earth, the wheles were list vp also. Whither so euer the spiece wente, thither wente they also, & y^e wheles were list vp & folowed thē, for y^e spiece of life was in the wheles.

When y^e beestes wete forth, stode still, or list them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, & were list vp, for y^e bieth off life was in the wheles.

Above ouer y^e heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Chustall, & that was spred out about vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abroad, one toward another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse off greace waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greace God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their wynges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboute their heades.

Above the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vward.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder y^e loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geneth light on enery syde. Rec the shyne and glistre y^e lightened round be abonte, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye appeareth in the cloudes. Eue so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE appeared. Whe I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The II. Chapter.

A Then sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp vpon thy fete. (Thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. And as he was cōmūnyng with me, the spiete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I marked the thunge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off mā: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those rynnagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, and their foresathers, vnto this daye.

Eze. 3. d Yee I will sende y vnto a people y haue rough vysages and stiff stomaches: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himselff hath spoken, y whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde hōusholde) they maye knowe yee that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

B Therefore (thou sonne off mā) feare the not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise y. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwarde hōusholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne off mā) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto y, and be not thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked hōusholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.

Apo. 5. a So as I was lokyng vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: and the hande opened it before me, and it was witten within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

The III. Chapter.

A Then sayde he vnto me: thou sonne off mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke, for to eate, and sayde vnto me:

Beholde therfore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy foreheade shall be harder then an Adamāt or flynt stone: that thou mayest feare them y lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwarde hōusholde.

He sayde morouer vnto me: thou sonne off mā, take diligent hede with thine eares, to y wordes that I speake vnto the, fasten them in thine herte: and go to the prisoners off thy people, speake vnto them, and saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spokē: Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the spiete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greates rushinge and remouynge off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that rushed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlyng off the wheelles, that were by them, which rushinge & noyse was very greate.

Now when the spiete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heuy and a soroufull mynde, but the honde off y LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnyng off the Moneth Abib, I came to the prisoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, and remayned in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seuen dayes, beinge very sory.

Psal. 136. a

And when the seuen dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off mā, I haue made the a watch man vnto the house off Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, and geue them warnyng at my cōmaundement.

Eze. 33. b

The prophet Ezechiel.

Alf I ſaye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that (withoute doute) he muſt dye, and thou geneſt him not warnynge, ner ſpeakeſt vnto him, that he maye turne from his euell waye, and ſo to lyue: Then ſhall the ſame vngodly man dye in his owne vnrigh- tuouſnes: but his bloude will I requyre off thyne honde. Neuertheles, yff thou gene warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forſa- ke not his vngodlynelle: then ſhall he dye in his owne wickedneſſe, but thou haſt diſchar- ged thy ſoule.

Eze. 18. 2 Now yf a righteous mā go fro his righ- tuouſneſſe, and do the thinge that is euell: I will laye a ſtomblinge blocke before him, and he ſhall dye, becauſe thou haſt not ge- uen him warnynge: Ree dye ſhall he in his owne ſynne, ſo that the vertue, which he did before, ſhall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre of thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhorteſt the righ- tuous, that he ſynne not, and ſo yf righteous do not ſynne: Then ſhall he lyue, becauſe he hath receaued thy warnynge, and thou haſt diſcharged thy ſoule. And there came the ho- be off the LORDE vpon me, and he ſayde vnto me: Stande vp, and go in to the felde, yf I maye there talke with the.

Eze. 1. 2 Eze. 2. 2 Eze. 1. 8 So when I had ryſen vp, and gone forth into the felde: Beholde, the glory off the LORDE ſtoode there, like as I ſawe it afore, by the water off Eobar.

Then fell I dorene vpon my face, and yf ſperts came in to me, which ſet me vp vpon my fete, and ſayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and ſparre thy ſelff in thyne houſe. Beholde (O thou ſonne off man) there ſhall chaynes be broughte for the, to bynde the wth all, ſo that thou ſhalt not eſcape out off the. And I will make thy tunge cleue ſo the ro- ſe off thy mouth, that thou ſhalt bedomme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obſtinate houſholde.

But when I ſpeake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and ſaye: Thus ſaith the LORDE God: who ſo heareth, let him heare: who ſo will not, let him leaue: for it is a franwar- de houſholde.

The III. Chapter.

21 Thou ſonne off man: take a tyle ſto- ne, and laye it before the, and deſcry- be vpon it the cite off Jeruſalem: how it is beſeged, how bulwoikes and ſtro- ge ditches are grauen on euery ſyde off it: deſcrybe alſo tentes, and an hoofte off men rounde aboute it.

Moreover, take an yron panne, and ſet it betwixte the & yf cite in ſteade off an yron wall, Then ſet thy face towarde it, beſege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynſt it, to wyne it. This ſhall be a token vnto the houſe off Iſ- rael. But thou ſhalt ſlepe vpon thy left ſy- de, and laye the ſynne of the houſe off Iſra- el vpon the.

Certayne dayes apoynted, thou ſhalt ſle- pe vpon that ſyde, and beare their ſynnes. Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their ſynnes) and the nombre off the daies: Thre hundred & xc. dayes muſt thou beare the wickedneſſe off the houſe off Iſra- el. When thou haſt fulfilled theſe dayes, lye dorene agayne, and ſlepe vpon thy right ſyde xl. dayes, and beare the ſynnes off the houſe off Iuda.

A daye for a yeare, a daye (I ſaye) for a yeare, will I ener laye vpon the. Therefore ſet now thy face agaynſt that beſeged Jeru- ſalem, and diſcouer thine arme, that thou ma- yeſt prophecie agaynſt it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou ſhalt not turne the from one ſyde to another, till thou haſt ended the dayes of thy ſege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barley beanes, growell ſede, milium and fitches: and putcheſe together in a veſſell, and make the loaves of bried therof, accordinge to the nom- bre of the dayes that thou muſt lye vpon yf ſyde: that thou mayeſt haue bried to eate, for thre hundred and xc. dayes.

And the meate that thou eateſt, ſhall ha- ue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie ſydes euery daye. This apoynted meate ſhalt thou eate daylie, from the begin- nynge to the ende.

Thou ſhalt dryncke alſo a certayne mea- ſure off water: Namely, the ſixte parte of an hin ſhalt thou dryncke daylie from the be- gynnynge to the ende. Barly cakes ſhalt thou eate, yet ſhalt thou firſt ſtrake the o- uer with māſe donge, yf they maye ſeit. And with that, ſayde the LORDE: Euen thus ſhal the children off Iſrael eate their defyled bried in the myddelt off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will ſcatre them.

Then ſayde I: Oh LORDE God, Behol- de, my ſoule was yet neuer ſtayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcaſe, or of that which was ſlayne of wilde beaſtes, nether came there euer eny vnclene fleſh in my mouth.

The V. Chapter.

A Take then a sharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shauethe hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a sunder.
And burnethe thirde part thereof in the fy-re in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe. As le house of Israel.

Morouer, thus sayde the LORDE God:
This same is Jerusalem. I set her in the middest of the heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgements more then y Gentiles the selues, and broken my commaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus sa-ieth the LORDE God: For so much as ye w^t

that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye ke-

lence and bloudsheddinge shall come vpon
you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you.
Euen I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The VI. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto
me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, turnethy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophecie vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LOR-DE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: Thus hath the LORDE God spoken to the mountaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

B slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how y I am the LORDE. Those y amonge you haue escaped the swerde, will I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatter you amonge the nations. And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

Baru. 9. f

As for that whorish and vnfaithfull herete of theirs, wherewith they runne awaye from me, I will breake it: yee & put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesses and abominacions, which they haue done: and shall lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vayne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch misery vpon them.

C The LORDE sayde mo: ouer vnto me: Smyte thine hondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the abominacions and wickednesses of the house of Israel, for because of the, they shal perish with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence. Who so is farre off, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swerde: and y other that are beseged, shall dye of hunger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, when youre slaynemen lye amonge youre goddes, and aboute youre altars: vpon all hie hilles and toppes off mountaynes, amonge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euen in the places, where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols.

I will stretch myne honde out vpon them, & will make the londe waste: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wilderness off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The VII. Chapter.

meth vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the: for I will sende my wroth vpo the, and wil punysh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and rewarde the after all thy abominacions. Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, accordinge to thy waies, and declare thy abominacions. Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Eze. 7. b

Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, one misery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, y^e houre is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at hande, the daye of sedicio is hard by, & no glad tidings vpo the most tynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wroth vpon the. I will iudge the after thy waies, and recompence the all thy abominacions.

B

Myne eye shal not oversee the, nether wil I spare the: but rewarde the after thy waies, and shewe thy abominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how y I am the LORDE, y^e smyteth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come, the houre is runne out, the rodde flourisheth, wylfulnesse waxeth grene, malicious violence is growne vp, and the vngodly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no complaynte be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

Eze. 7. b

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye: Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that selleth, let him not be sorry: for why, Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lye. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, y it shal not be hyndered: To mā also w^h his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

Esa. 13. c All hondes shalbe letten downe, and all knes shalbe weake as the water: they shall gyde them selues with sack cloth, feare shall fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confounded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: Rec their syluer and golden maye not be synner them, in the daye of the fearfull wrath of the LORDE.

Soph. 1. c
Ecc. 5. b D They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, neether fyll their emptie belies therewith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costely Jeweles for their pompe and pryde, but also abhominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhoured. Moreover, I will gene it into y hondes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to y wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

Osee. 3. 2 My face wil I turne from the, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the cheues shall go into it, and suspende it. I wil make clene ryddanise, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrighteous indignment of innocent bloude, & the cite is full off abhominacions.

E Wherefore, I will bringe the most cruell tyrantes from amonge the Zechen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to cease, and they shall take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shall seeke peace, but they shall haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shall fellowe another, and one rumoure shall come after another: Then shall they seeke visions in wayne at their prophetes. The lawe shall be gone from the prestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kynge shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heynesse, and y hondes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, & acordinge to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The VIII. Chapter.

21 It happened, that in the sixte ycare, the fift daye of the sixte Month I sat in my house, and the LORDES off the counsell off Juda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpon me.

The viij. Chap.

This similitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayre lockes off my head, and the sprete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Jerusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: enē as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then lift I vp mine eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an altier made vnto the ymage off prouocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what the se do? Seist thou the greates abhominacions that the house off Israel ceimnytte in this place: which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt see yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and whē I looked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, dygge thow the wall. And when I dygged thow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy waye in, & loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes & beastes, all Idols and abheminacions of y house off Israel paynted enerychone rounde aboute the wall.

There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes of the counsell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Jaasania the sonne off Saphan: And every one off them had a censoure in his honde, & out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, hast thou sene what the Senators off the house off Israel do secretly, every one in his chambie? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seeth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the woilde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt see the greates abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there sat women mourninge for Thamuz. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of mā? Turne y aboute, & thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me into the inwarde courte of the LORDES house: & beholde, at the porte of the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aulter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backes vpon the Temple of the LORD, & their faces toward the east, and they se worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinkerth the house of Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vnder take to prouoke me vnto anger? Yee & purposely to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therefore wil I also do some thinge in my wrochfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouersee them, neither wil I spare them. The IX. Chapter.

HE cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, every man with his weaponned honde to the slaughter. Then came there six men out of the strete of the vpper porte toward the north, and every man a weapon in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lynnynge rayment, and a wyrters yncel home by his syde.

These went in, and stode beside the brazen aulter: for the glory of the LORD was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the threshold of the house, & he called the mā, that had the lynnynge rayment vpon him, and the wyrters yncel home by his syde, and the LORD sayde vnto him:

Go thy waye thorow the cite of Jerusalem, and see this marck n̄ Thau vpo the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abhominacions, that be done therein.

And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, o-uersee none, spare none: Ryll, & destroye both olde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this marck n̄ Thau vpo them: se that ye touch them not, and begyne at my Sanctuary. Then they begane at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wete out and slewe downe thorow y cite. Now when they had done y slaughter, & I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, & cried, sayenge: O LORD, wilt thou then destroye all the residue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpo Jerusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house of Israel and Juda is very greate: so that the lode is full of bloude, and y cite full of vnfaithfulnesse: For they saye: Tush, y LORD regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therefore wil I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, neither wil I spare them, but wil recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lynnynge rayment vpon him, and the wyrters, yncel home by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORD, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The X. Chapter.

AS I looked, beholde, In the firmament that was about the Cherubins there appeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpo them: Then sayde he that sat therein, to him that had the lynnynge rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crept in, that I might se.

Now the Cherubins stode vpo the right syde of the house, when the man wete in, and the cloude fylled the ynnernier courte. But the glory of the LORD remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the threshold of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. Yee and the sounde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man y was clothed in lynnynge, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest of y wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth this honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto y fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lynnynge rayment) in his honde: which toke it; and wente out. And vnder the wynges of y Cherubins, there appeared the lyknes of a mā hāte: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cha

When they wente forth, they wete all iij together, not turnyng aboute in their goinge: But wherethe first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. Their whole bodies, their backes, their hōdes z wynges, yee z the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call y^e wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Every one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, z they were lifted vp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar. Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: z when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, y^e wheles were lift vp also with the, for the spire of life was in the wheles.

Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the threshelde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flactred with their wynges, and lift the selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Every one had foure faces, z every one foure wynges, z vnder their wynges, as it were mēs hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, even as I had senethem, by the water of Cobar, z so was the countenance of the: Every one in his goinge wente straight forward.

And behelde, there were xij men vnder the dore: amonge whom I sawe Jaasania the sonne of Asur, z Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin mysche, and a wicked counceile take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at hande, let vs buylde houses:

The xi. Chap.

This Jerusalem is the cauldron, z we beth flesh. Therefore shalt thou prophcie vnto them, yee prophcie shalt thou vnto them, O some of man. And with that, fell the spire of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me: Speake, thus saith the LORDE: On this manner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginacions of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthered in this cite, z filled the strettes full of the slayne.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: 23 The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, z this cite is the cauldron: But I wil bringe you out of it: ye haue drawe out y^e swerde, enē so wil I also bringe a swerde ouer you, saith y^e LORDE God. I wil dryne you out of this cite and deliuer you in to youre enemies hande, z wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal nette be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therein: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punyssh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in these commandmentes ye haue not walke, nē kepe his lawes: but haue done as the customes of the heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpo my face, z cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then verily destroye all the remnant in Israel? And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Thy bretheren, thy kynnsfolke, z y^e whole house of Juda, which dwell at Jerusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therefore tell them, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amonge the Gentiles, z scatre you amonge the nacions, z I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. And as for all impedimentes, z all youre abhominacions: I wil take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, z wil plante a new spire within y^e bowels. That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, z geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commandmentes, and kepe myne ordinances, z do them: that ye maye be my people, and I your God. But loke whose her-tes are disposed to folowe their abhormacions and wicked luynges: Those mens ve-des will I bunge vpon their owne heades,

Cherubins lise vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORD was vpon them. So the glory of the LORD wente vp from the myddest of the cite, & stode vpon the mount of the cite to-warde the east. But the wynde toke me vp, & in a vision (which came by the spere of God)
it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge
the prisoners. Then the vision that I had se-ne, vanyshed awaye from me. So I spake vnto the prisoners, all the wordes of the LORD,
which he had shewed me.

The XII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwer de housholde: which haue eyes to se, & yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare
they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by sayre daye light, & they maye se. See euē in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peradventure they wil conside, & they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by sayre daye light, that they maie se: & thou y self shalt go forth also at euē
in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flittereth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not y earth, for I haue made the a shewtoke vnto the house of Israel.
Now as y LORD commaunded me, so I dyd:
y gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At enen I brake downe an hole tho-row the wall with my honde: & when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpo my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORD vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, y frauwerde housholde are the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORD God:
This punysshment toucheth the chiefe rulers
at Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am your shewtoke: like as I haue done, so shal
it happen vnto you: Flye shal ye also, and go

you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe
the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: he shal ceuer his face, that he se not the ground, with his eyes.

My lyne will I sprede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, and carie him to Babilon, in the lode of the Caldees: which he shal not se, & yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatere them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them.
So when I haue scatred them amonge the heithen, and strowed them in the londes:
they shal knowe, that I am y LORD. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger & pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, howe that I am the LORD.

Moreover, the worde of the LORD came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fearfull treblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse & sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the lon-de, speake thou on this maner: Thus saith the LORD God, to them that dwell in Jerusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke your water with heynesse: Ye the londe with the fulnesse therof shalt layde waiste, for y wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, howe that I am the LORD.

Yet came the worde of the LORD vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man,
what manner of byworde is that, which ye vse
in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Cusch, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge,
all the visios are of none effecte: Tell them
therefore, thus saith the LORD God: I wil make that byworde to cease, so that it shal nomore be comonly used in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that enery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shal be fulfilled. There shal no vision be in vayne, neither eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it is I the LORD, that speake it: and what soeuer I y LORD speake, it shal be perfourmed, and not be slacke in commynge.

See even in youre dayes (O ye franwarde housholde) will I deuise some thinge, & bunge it to passe, saith the LORD God. And the worde of the LORD came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The

The XIII. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: & sayethou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne hertes: Hearc the worde of the LORD, thus saith the LORD God: Wo be vnto those foolish prophetes, that folowe their owne sprete, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, that men might abyde the perrell in the daye of the LORD. Wayne thinges they se, & tell lies, to mayntene their preachinges withall. The LORD (sayeth they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORD hath not sent them. Wayne visions haue ye sene, & spokē false prophecies. when ye saye: the LORD hath spoken it, whereas I neuer sayde it.

B Therefore, thus saith the LORD God: Because youre wordes be wayne, & ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saith the LORD. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out wayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the counsell of my people, ner witten in the booke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the lande of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORD God. And that for this cause: they haue disceaued my people, & tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, & they dawbe it with lowse claye. Therefore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered moiter, that it shal fall. For there shal come a greate shurwe of rayne, greate stones shal fall vpon it, & a fore storme of wynde shal breake it, so shal y wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the moiter, that ye dawbed it withall: Therefore thus saith the LORD God: I wil breake out in my wroth full displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shurwe of rayne, & hale stones in my wroth, to destroye withall.

As for y wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered moiter, I wil breake it downe, &

make it eanen with the grounde: so that the foundacion therof shal remoue, & it shal fall, yee & ye youre selues shal perish in the myddest therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORD. Thus wil I perfourme my wroth vpon this wall, & vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered moiter, and then will I saye vnto you: The wall is gone, & the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophecie vnto the cite of Ierusalem, & loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saith the LORD God. Wherfore (o thou sonne of mā,) set thy face agaynst the daughters of y people, which prophecie out of their owne hertes: & speake thou prophecie agaynst them, & saye: Thus saith the LORD God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all arnie heles, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, ye promyse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for an hand full of barley, & for a peece of bred: when ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, & promyse life to them, that lyue not: Thus ye dyssemble with my people, y beleuech yo lies.

Wherfore thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I wil also vpo the pilowes, wher with ye catch the soules in flyenge: the will I take from youre armes, & let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters also wil I teare in peces, & deliuer my people out of youre honde: so that they shal come nomore in youre hōdes to be spoyle, & ye shal knowe, that I am the LORD. Seinge y with youre lyes ye discomforte the herte of the righteous, whom I haue not discomfited: Agayne: For so moch as ye corage the honde of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, & lyue: therefore shall ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophecie youre owne gessinges: for I wil deliuer my people out of youre honde, that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORD.

The XIII. Chapter.

There resorted vnto me certayne of y elders of Israel, & sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORD vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, & go purposly vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then be counsell at me? Therefore speake vnto them, & saye thus saith the LORD God: Every man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stamble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquire eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answere, a cordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snared in their owne herres, because they be cleane gone frome, for their Idols sakes.

Eze. 20. c

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORDE God: Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all yo^r abominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a stranger, that sojourneth in Israel) which departeth frome, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stumblinge in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to axe counsell at me thorow him: vnto y^e man wil I the LORDE geue answere, by myne owne self.

B

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how y^e I am the LORDE. And yf that prophet be disceaued, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORDE myself haue disceaued that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punished for their wickednesse.

Iob 12. c

A cordinge to y^e synne of him that aareth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that y^e house of Israel be led nomore frome thoro^r errorre, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouysion of their bried, and sende verch vpon them, to destroye man & beest in the londe. And though Noe, Daniel and Job these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their rightuousnesse deliuer but their owne soules, saith the LORDE God.

Al I bunge noysome beestes in to the londe, to waist it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therein for beestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner daughters, but be only deliuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waist.

Or, yf I bunge a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beest in it, and yf these thre men were therein: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal deliuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but only be saued them selues.

Al I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and beest, and yf Noe, Daniel and Job were therein: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) they shal deliuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but saue their owne soules in their rightuousnesse.

Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: Though I sende my foure trublous plagges vpon Jerusalem: the swearde, hunger, perious beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and beest out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therein, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and daughters. Beholde, they shal come forth vnto you, and ye shal se their waye, and what they take in honde, & ye shal be comforted, as touchinge all the plagges that I haue brought vpon Jerusalem.

Iere. 27. b

They shal comforte you, when ye se their waye and workes: and ye shal knowe, how y^e it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Jerusalem, as I dyd, saith the LORDE God.

The XV. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What commeth of the vyne amonge all other trees: and of the wyne stocke, amonge all other tymbre of the groaue? Do men take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to asshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

26

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therfore thus saith the LORDE God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wodd: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Jerusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shal go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shal consume them. Then shal ye knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the londe waist: because they haue so sore offended, saith the LORDE God.

The XVI. Chapter.

The prophet Ezechiel.

The xvi. Chap.

A Gayne, the worde of L O R D E spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Jerusalem their abominacions, and saye: thus saith the LORDE God vnto Jerusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amoute, thy mother a Cethite. In y daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, y stringe of thy navel was not cut of: thou wast not bathed in water to make thee cleane: Thou wast nether rubbed w salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded thee so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for y, or to shewe the soch sauoure, but thou wast vtterly cast out vpon y felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe thee troden downe in thine owne bloude, z sayde vnto thee: thou shalt be purged from thine owne bloude, fro thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clenjed. So I planted thee, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, z waxe greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by y, z loked vpon thee: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee eue the tyme to wowe thee. Then spied I my clothes ouer thee, to couer thy dishonestie: Yee I made an ooth vnto thee, z maried my self with thee (saith the LORDE God) z so thou becamest myne owne. Then washed I thee with water, z purged thy bloude from thee. I anoynted thee with oyle, I gaue thee chaunge of raymentes, I made thee shues of Tarus lether: I gyrted y aboute w white sylcke, I clothed thee with kerchues, I decked thee w costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spages vpo thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, z set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckt with syluer z golde, z thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of needle worke z of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothinge but symnels, honny z oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou z beutifull, yee enen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpo thee, saith the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, z played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten thee a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by thee, z hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētes of dyuerse colours, z decktethine anlters therewith, where vpon thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. The goodly ornāmētes z Jewels which I gaue thee of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou takē, z made themes ymages ther of, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmētes of dynerse colours hast thou taken, and decktethincherewith: myne oyle z incense hast thou set lefore them. My meate which I gaue thee, as symnels, oyle z hony: (to fede thee withall) that hast thou set before them, for a swete sauoure. And this came also to passe, saith the LORDE God: Then hast takē thine owne sonnes z dough ters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me: and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and givest them ouer, to be brēt vnto them? And yet in all thy abhominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembered the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, z troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto thee, saith y LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and brel houses in every place: yee at the heade of every strete hast thou buylded the an aulter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which had moch flesh: z thus hast thou vsd thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer thee, and wil mynish thy stoare of fode, and deliuer thee ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie thee: Yee thou hast played the harlot, z not had ynough. Thus hast thou still cōmitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circūcise thine herte (saith the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou precious whore: buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of every strete, and thy brel houses in all places? Thou hast not bene as an other whore, y maketh booste of hir wynnynge: but as a wife y breaketh reblocke, z taketh other in steade of hir husbōde. Giftes are geuent to all other whores, but thou gevest rewardes vnto all thy louers: z offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, & to committe fornicacio with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yet the re hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, & no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therefore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spent thy moneye, & discovered thy shame, thou & thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast geuenthem: Beholde therefore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee & all them whom thou fauourest, and every one that thou hastest: and will discover thy shame before the, that they all maye see thy fylthines.

Morouer, I wil iudge the as a breake of wedlocke and a murtherer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy. I wil geue the ouer into their power, that shal breake downe thy steeles, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre & beutifull Jewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked & bare: And they shal bunge the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, & slaye the downe with their sweardes. They shal burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to ceasse, so that thou shalt geue out no more wardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and no more to be displeased? seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges? Beholde therefore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saith the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd vnto the, according to thy wickednesse and all thy abominacions. Beholde, all they y^e vse comon proverbes, shall vse this proverbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a daughter.

Thou art euen thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir housbond and hir children: yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsake their husbodes and their children. Your mother is a Cethite, and your father an Amorite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir daughters that dwel vpon thy left honde.

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on y^e right hōde, is Sodoma and hir daughters.

The xvi. Chap. Ho. lxi.

Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euell, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the synnes of thy sister Sodoma werethese: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Idleness: these thinges had she and hir daughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and neddy, but were proude, and dyd abominable thinges before me: therefore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. Neither hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therefore bearethine owne shame, thou that in synne hast overcome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therefore (I saye) and bearethine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Sodoma and hir daughters: the captiuyte of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bunge them agayne, so wil I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amonge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with y^e self & thy daughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whe thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynes and abominacion, saith the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: I shal be (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despysed the oath, and broken the couenaunte. Nevertheless, I wil remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an everlastinge couenaunt: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of the: then shalt thou receave of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy daughter.

The prophet Ezechiel.

ters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. And so I wil renuew my couenaunt with the, y thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thinke vpon it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgiven the, all that thou hast done, saith the LORDE God.

The XVII. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man; put forth a darke speake and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: There came a greete Aegle with greete wynges, yee w^m mighte longe wynges, and full of fethers of dynerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a braunch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it in to the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a braunch of the londe, and planted it in a frutesfull ground, he brought it vnto greete waters, & set it as a willye trecherby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greete wyne stocke, but lowe by the ground: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spred out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greete one, which had greete wynges and many fethers: and beholde, y rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spred out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Neuertheles it was plated vpon a good ground besyde greete waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prosper? shal not his rotes be plucked out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythered and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shal it prosper therfore? Shal it not be dyed vp and wythered, yee euen in the shutting out of his blossomes, as soone as y east wynde bloweth?

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the King of Babilon came to Jerusalem, and toke the King & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the Kinges seide, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an oath of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours into Egypte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in y place where the King dwelleth, that made him King: whose oath he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hat broken. Whether shall Pharao with his greete hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diches, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. Forseinge he hath despised the oath, and broken the couenaunt (whereas he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bunge myne oath that he hath despised, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade. I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punyssh him, because of the greete offence that he made me. As for those y fle from him out of y hoost, they shal be slayne with the swerde. The residue shal be scattered towarde all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greete Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dyed vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to flourish: Euen I the LORDE y spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The XVIII. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon proverbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and the childrens teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith y LORDE God, ye shal vse this byworde nomore in Israel.

Isa. 24

The prophet Ezechiel.

Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y^e sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. If a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he listeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth wth no mens truous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his better his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clothech the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraueth his honde from doinge wronge: he hadleth faith fully betwixte man & man: he walbeth in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & persourmeth the faith fully:) This is a righteous mā, he shal surely lyue, saith the L O R D E God.

W If he now get a sonne, that is a murtherer, a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and neddy: he robbeth and spoyleth: he geueth not the better his pledge agayne: he listeth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abheminable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abhominacions, he shal dye: his bloude shal be vpon him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seith all this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like: Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he listeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he vexeth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge: he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he dealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clothech the naked: he oppreseth not the poore: he receauech no vsury, ner eny thinge ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walkech in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye in his fathers synne, but shal lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppresed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: so, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherfore shal he not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therfore: because the sonne hath done equyte and right, hath kepte all my commaundementes, and done them: therfore, shal he lyue in dede.

The same soule y^e synneth, shal dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, ne-

nether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The righteousnes of the righteous shal be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf y^e vngodly will turne awaye, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundementes, and do the thinge y^e is equall & right: doubtles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shal not be thought vpon: but in his righteousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saith the L O R D E God: but rather that he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the righteous turne awaye from his righteousnes, and do iniquyte, accordinge to all the abhominacions, that y^e wicked mā doth: shal he lyue? All the righteousnes that he hath done, shal not be thought vpon: but in the faute that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: Tush, the waye of y^e L O R D E is not indifferēt. Heare therfore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a righteous mā turneth awaye from his righteousness, and medleth with vngodlynes: he must dye therein: See for the vnrighthousnes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equall and right: he shal saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shal lyue, and not dye.

And yet saith the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the L O R D E is not equall. Are my wayes vnrigh, o ye house of Israel: Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge every man, accordinge to his wayes, O ye house of Israel, saith the L O R D E God. Wherfore, be conuerted, and turne you cleue from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye fro you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new spiete. Wherfore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel? Seinge I haue no pleasure in y^e death of him that dyeth, saith the L O R D E God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

whelpes: One of hir whelpes she brought vp, & it became a lyon: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The heithen herde of him, & toke him in their nettes, & brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope & comforth was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lyon of him: which wente amonge the lyons, & became a fearce lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waiste: In somoch that the whole londe and enery thinge therin, were vterly desolate, thow the very voyce of his roaringe.

Then came the heithen together on enery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in their pytte. So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babilon: which put him in prison, that his voyce shulde nomore be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy mother, she is like a vyne in thy bloude, planted by the water syde: hir frutes and braunches are growen out of many waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might hane made stauces therof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceded yf heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was roted out in displeasure, and cast downe to the ground. The East wynde dried vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, wythered and brient in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderness, in a drye and thurstie ground. And there is a fyre gone out of hir stalkes, which hath brient vp hir braunches and hir frute: so that she hath no mo stronge stalkes, to be stauces for officers. This is a piteous and miserable thinge.

The XX. Chapter.

In the xviij. yeare the x. daye of the moneth, it happened, that certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to ake counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to ake any thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE,) I will geue you no answer. Wilt thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewethem the abhominacions of their forefathers, & tell the: Thus saith the LORDE God: In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde

vpon the sede of the house of Jacob, & shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lift vp myne honde ouer the, and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, euen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with mylke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lode amonge all other: Then sayde I vnto them: Cast awaye every man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye every man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wraeth vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them into the wilderness: I gaue them my commaundementes, & shewed the my lawes: which who so kepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and thereby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they have cast awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

Then I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, & to consume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the heithen, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them into the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylke & hony, & is a pleasure of all londes: & yf because they refused my lawes, & walked not in my commaundementes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Nevertheless myne eye spared the, so yf I wolde not vterly slayeth, & consume the in the wilderness. Moreover, I sayde vnto their sermes in yf wilderness: walke not in the statutes of yo^r forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and defyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE youre God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes & do them, halowe my Sabbathes: for they are a token betwixte me & you, that ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE. Notwithstondinge, their sonnes rebelled against me also: they walked not in my statutes, they kepte not my lawes to fulfill them (which he that doth shal lyue in them) nether halowed they my Sabbath dayes. The I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wiath vpon them in the wilderness. Neuertheles I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the heithen, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatere them amonge the heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherfore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thorow the which they shulde not lyue, & I vnhalowed them in their owne gyses: (when I appoynted for my self all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

D Therefore (O thou some of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Besyde all this, youre forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, y I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thicket trees: they made there their offringes, and prouoked me with their oblations, makinge swete sauours there, & poured out their drinke offeringes. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therfore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherfore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vncleane as youre forefathers, & committe whordome also with their abhominacions. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblations, & to whose honoure ye burne youre children: ye defyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye the come, and aske any question at me? O ye householde of Israel! As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answeere of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the heithen, then, & do as other people in the londe, woe & stone wil we worshipe.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherin ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie hode, with a stretched out arme & w indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you into the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished yo^r forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenaunt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitation: as for the londe of Israel, they shal not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

So now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blasphemie my holy name with youre offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, enē vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipe me: and in the same place wil I fauoure them, and there wil I requyre youre heauy offringes, and the firstlinges of youre oblations, with all youre holy thinges.

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherin ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue broughte you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lode, that I swore to geue vnto youre forefathers. There shal ye call to remembrance youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginations, wherin ye haue bene defyled: and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I entreate you after my name, not after yo^r wicked wayes, ner accordinge to youre corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Moreover, the worde of y LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou some of mā, set thy face toward the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde toward the southe: heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I will kindle a fyre in the, y^e shall consume the grene trees wth the drye. No man shall be able to quench his flame, but all that letech from the south to the north, shall be brent therein: & all flesh shall se, that I the LORD haue kindled it, so that no man maye quench it. Then sayde I: O LORD, they wil saye of me: Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The XXI. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORD came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, & prophetic agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, & wil drawe my swearde out of y^e sheeth, & rote out of y^e both the rightuous & the wicked. Seunge then that I will rote out of the both the rightuous & wicked, therfore shall my swearde go out of his sheeth, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORD haue drawen my swearde out of the sheeth, & it shall not be put in agayne.

Mourne therfore (o thou sonne of man) y^e thy loynes cracke withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherefore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that cometh, at the which all hertes shall melt, all hondes shall be letten downe, all stomackes shall faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it cometh & shall be fulfilled, saith the LORD God.

A gaïne, the worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophetic, and speake: Thus saith the LORD God: speake, the swearde is sharpened & wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, & scoured y^e it maye be bright. O, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shall bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to y^e dihtinge, y^e good holde maye be take of it. This swearde is sharpened & dight, y^e it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shall smyte my people, & all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpon thy thee, for, wherefore shulde not the place & staff of iudgement come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, & smyte thine hertes to recter: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, y^e manslayers swearde, that swearde of the greateslaughter, which shall smyte them, even in their priuy chambers: to make them abashed & sayn

The xxi. Chap.

te at the hertes, & in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bight and sharpe is it, how wel dight & mete for y^e slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so euer thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrochfull indignacion: Euen I the LORD haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORD came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of y^e Kinge of Babilon maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shall set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shall he discharge him out a corner. Make y^e a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabach of the Ammonites, and to the strenghe cite of Jerusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnyng of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: to aye counsell at the soychsayers, casting the lottes with his arrowes, to aye counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyer. But the soychsayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon Jerusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greatesoyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batellrammes agaynst the gates, to graue vpon dyches, & to make bulwerkes.

Nevertheless, as for y^e soychsayenge, they shall holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be take and wonne. Therfore saith the LORD God: For so moch as ye youre selues shewe youre effence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (I saye) that ye yourselves haue made mencion thereof, ye shall be taken by violence.

O thou shamefull wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saith the LORD God: take a waye the mytre, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them will I, and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgement belongeth, and to whom I haue geue it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, & speake: Thus saith the LORD God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speake then: The swearde, the swearde, is drawen forth already to the slaughter, & scoured that it glisireth (because thou hast looked the out vanities, & propheticd lyes) y^e it maye come upon thy necke, like as vpon the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vp agayne into the sheath, yet will I punyssh the, in the londe where thou wast nourished & borne, and pour my indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and deliuer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and y^e bloude shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

The XXII. Chapter.

21 Worouer, the worde of y^e LORDE came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloutheurstie cite? Shewe the their abhominacions, & tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: O thou cite, y^e sheddest bloude in y^e myddest of the, y^e thy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thyself guilty, in y^e bloude y^e thou hast shed: & defyled y^e i^y ydols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therefore will I make y^e to be confounded amonge the heithen, & to be despised in all the lodes, whether they be nye or farre fro the: they shal laugh y^e to scorne, thou y^e hast gotten the so foule a name, & art full off myschefe. Beholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought euery man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the straunger, in the haue they vexed the wyddowe & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despised my Sanctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. Murderers are there in the, that shed bloude, & eate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse unhappynesse.

22 In y^e haue they discovered their fathers shame, in the haue they vexed women in the ir sicknesse. Euevery man hath dealt shamefully with his neighbours wife, & abheminably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath euery man forced his owne sister, euen his fathers daughter: yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken vsury & encrease, thou hast oppressed thy neighbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saith the LORDE God. Beholde, I haue smitten my hondes vpon thy couetousnesse, that thou hast used, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende themselves, in the tyme that I shall brynge vpon the: Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will brynge it also to passe.

I will scatere the amonge the heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lodes, and wil cause thy fylchynesse to cease out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse. All they that shulde be brasfe, tynne, yron & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will brynge you together vnto Jerusalem, like as syluer, brasfe, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowen there vnder to melt them: Euen so wil I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will brynge you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted ther in.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therein: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell her: Thou art an vnclene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: thy prophetes that are in the, are sworne together to deuoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in y^e. Thy priestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. They put no dyfference betwene the holy and unholy, nether discerneth betwene the clene and vnclene: they turne their eyes fro my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.

Thy rulers in the are like many shinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities, and propheticies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorcio and robbery. They vex the poore and neddy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vpon the hedge, and see himself in the gappe before me in the lodes behalfe, y^e I shulde not utterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. re out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burnethem in the fyre of my wrath: theirowne wayes will I recompence vpon theiir heades, saith the LORDE God.

The XXIII. Chapter.

The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes bussed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Jerusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whoringe, when I had take her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckt in costly aray: sayre yongemen, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yongemen off Assiria: For she was madde vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Yetter caused she fro the somnicad, that she vsed with the Egiptians: for in hir yowth they laye wth her, they bussed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. Wherefore, I delyuered her in to y^e hōdes of hir louers, euen the Assirians, whom she soloned. There she discovered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, and they punyshed her.

Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, and destroyed herself wth inordinate loue, more then she, and exceded hir sister in whordome: she loued y^e Assirians (which also laye wth her) namely, the prynces and greates lordes, that were clothed wth all maner of gorgeous apparell, all lusty horsmen and sayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled alike. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with sayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokyng all like prynces (after y^e maner of the Babilonians and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediately, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messengers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Now when the Babilonians came to her,

The xxiij. Chap.

they laye with her, and defyled her with theiir whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discovered and sene: then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euer the longer the more, and remembred the dayes off hir youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like y^e flesh of Asses, and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renued the fylthyneesse of thy youth, when thy louers bussed y^e pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therefore (o Ooliba) thus saith y^e LORDE God. I will rayse vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians: all yonge and sayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, chareites, and a greete multitude of people: which shal be harnessed aboute the on euery syde, wth bresplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punysh y^e before them, yet they the selues shal punysh the, accordinge to their owne indgmet. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shal deale cruelly with the. They shal cut off thy nose and thine eares, and the remnaunt shal fall thorow the swearde. They shal cary awaye thy sonnes and daughters, and the residue shal be brent in the fyre. Thy shal strype the out of thy clothes, and cary thy costly Jewels awaye with them.

Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthyneesse and whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte: so that thou shalte turne thine eyes nomore after them, and cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will delyuer y^e in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hatest: yee euen in to the hondes of them, with whom thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shal deale cruelly with y^e: All thy labour shal they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled y^e self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therefore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy hand.

Thus saith the LORD God: Thou shalt dryne off thy sisters cuppe, how depe & farre so ever it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dioncennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of y^e sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruccion & waistinge: the same shalt thou dryne, and suppe it out euē to y^e diegges, yee thou shalt eate vp the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For euē I haue spoken it, saith the LORD God.

Etherfore thus saith y^e LORD God: For so moch as thou hast forgottē me, & cast me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylthinesse & whoredome. The LORD sayde morouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reprove Wola & Wolibā? Shewe thē their abhominacions: namely, y^e they haue brokē their wedlocke, & stayned their hōdes wth bloude: yee euē wth their Idols haue they committed aduontry, & offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. Yee & this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sanctuary in that same daye, & haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent y^e messengers for men out of farre countrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: thou sattest vpō a goodly bed, & a table spred before the: wherupon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greate cheare wth her, & the men y^e were sent frō farre countrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue bracelets vpon their hondes, & set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harlotry also wth yōder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Wola & Wolibā, those filchy women.

O ye all that loue vertue and rightuousnes, iudge thē, punyssh them: as aduourers and murderers ought to be iudged and punysshed. For they are breakers off wedlocke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherfore thus saith the LORD God: bunge a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be scatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gore them with their sweardes. They shal slaye their sonnes and daughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all y^ech fylthyne out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vncleinesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthinesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shalbe punysshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: & ye shall knowe, that I am the LORD.

The XXIII. Chapter.

In the ix. yeare, in the x. Moneth, the x. daye off the Moneth, came the worde off the LORD vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, wyte vp the name off this daye, yee euē y^e houre of this present daye: when the kynge of Babilon set himself agaynst Ierusalē. Shewe y^e obstinate howsholde a parable, & speake vnto thē: Thus saith the LORD God: Get the a pot, set it on, & poure water in to it: put all the peces together in it, all the good peces: the loyne and the shulder, & fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, & an heape off bones withall: let it boyle well, & let the bones seyth well therin.

With that, sayde the LORD God on this maner: Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of y^e pot, wher vpon the rustynesse hāgeth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast therfore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with dust. And therfore haue I letten her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bunge my wrothfull indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saith y^e LORD God: Wo be vnto that bloudthurstie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou y^e bones together, kynble thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well sodde, that the bones maye be sucked out. Morouer, set the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote: that the fylth and rustynesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so moch off it: the rustynesse must be brent out. Thy fylthinesse is abhominable, for I wolde haue clenfed the, but thou woldest not be clenfed. Thou canst not be purged from thine vncleinesse, till I haue poured my wrothfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORD haue so deuysed: Yee it is come therto allready, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I wil not be intreated: but accordinge to thy wayes & ymaginacions, thou shalt be punysshed, saith the LORD God.

The prophet Ezechiel.

■ And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine eyes w^t a plage: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therfore: thou mayest mourne by thy selff alone, but vse no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, ceasse not thy face, and eate no mourners bried. So I spake vnto the people by tymes in the mornynge, and at euen my wyfe dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was commaunded. And y^e people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Tell the house off Israel, thus saith y^e LORDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary: eue the glory off youre power, the pleasure off y^e eyes, and the thinge that ye loue: youre sonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, shall fall thorow the swerde.

■ Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: Ye shall not hyde youre faces, ye shall eate no mourners bried: youre bonettes shall ye haue vpon youre heades, & shues vpon youre fete. Ye shall nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre synnes ye shall be sorowfull, and one repēce with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shew tokē. For loke as he hath done, so (when this cometh) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am y^e LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne off man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burthē off their bodies: namely, their sonnes and daughters: Thē shall there one escape, and come vnto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shall y^e mouth be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be no more domme: Yee and thou shalt be there shew tokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XXV. Chapter.

■ The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, set thy face agaynst y^e Ammonites, prophesy vpon them, and saye vnto the Ammonites: Heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe off Israel, I trow it be now desolate: yee ad ouer the house off Juda, I trow they be now led awaye prisoners: Beholde, I wil delyuer y^e to the people off the east, y^e they maye haue the in possession: these shall see their castles and houses in the. They shall eate thy frute, and drynke vp thy mylke. As for Rabbath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepfold: and ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

■ So thus saith the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine handes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioysed in thine herte ouer the londe off Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the also, and delyuer the, to be spoyled off the heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the belayed waiste, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

■ Thus saith y^e LORDE God: For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Juda, it is but like as all other Gentiles be: Therfore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weapenlesse, and take awaye the strength: their cities and chiefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely, Beresimoth, Baalmeō and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto the off the east, y^e they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shall no more be had in remembraunce amonge the heithen. Euen thus will I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

■ Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: Because that Edom hath avenged & eased himself vpon the house off Juda, therfore thus saith the LORDE: I wil reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and best out off it. From Themā vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shall be slayne with the swerde. Thorow my people off Israel, wil I avenge me agayne vpon Edom: they shall handle him, acordyng to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shall knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

■ Thus saith y^e LORDE God: For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despirefull stomaches, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therfore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perishe. A greate vengeance will I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The prophet Ezechiel.

It happened, that in the xi. yeare, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Jerusalem: A ha, now I crow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my bely full. See therefore saiech y^e LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpon the, I wil bringe a greate multitude off people agaynst y^e, like as whē the see aryseth with his waves: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hangge vp their nettes by the see syde. Then I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gentiles shal spoyle her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perish with the swerde, y^e they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

B For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will bringe hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kynge off Babylon & a kynge of kynges) from the North, vpon Tyre, with horses, charrettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude of people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with y^e swerde: But agaynst y^e, he shall make bullworke & graue vp dyches aboute the, & lye vp his shylde agaynst y^e. His slynges & baretrames shal he prepare for thy walles, & wth his weapes breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer y^e, they shal be so many: y^e walles shal shake at the noyse of y^e horse men, charrettes & wheles: when he cometh to thy portes, as men do into an open cite. With the hofes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

Ice 7. d He shal slaye thy people wth the swerde, & breake downe the pilers of thy strength. They shal waiste awaye thy riches, & spoyle y^e marchaundise. Thy walles shal they breake downe, & destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymber & foundations, shal they cast in the water. Thus wil I bringe the melody of thy songes, & the voyce of thy mynstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal nomore be herde. I wil make a bare stone off the, yee a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For euē I y^e LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernyng Tyre: The Isles shal be moved at the noyse off thy fall, & at the crie of the slayne, y^e shal be murthered in the. All kynges off the see shal come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their robes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with trembling shal they be clothed, they shall sit vpon the ground: they shal be afrayed at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, y^e hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see wth thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so utterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Isles, yee and the Isles them selues shal stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I bringe the depe vpon the, y^e greate waters maye couer the: Then wil I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to y^e pytte: vnto a people that hath bene longe deed, and set the in a londe y^e is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so y^e no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in hono^r, in the lōde of the luynges. I wil make an ende off the, and thou shalt be gone.

Thou shalt be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for evermore, saith y^e LORDE God.

The XXVII. Chapter.

Ice 25. 28. The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mā, make a lamentable cōplaynte vpon Tyre, & saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, y^e occupieth with moch people: and many Isles: thus speaketh y^e LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruclous goodly. All y^e tables haue they made of Ciprie trees of the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they take Cedre trees, to make the mastes: & the Ores of Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made of yuery, & of costly wod out of the Ile of Cethum. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle worke out off the londe of Egypte, to haue vpon thy mast & thy hanginges of yalow sylke & purple, out of y^e Isles off Elisa. They of Sidō & Arvad werethy maryners, & the wysest in Tyre werethy shypmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mended & stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipmā occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hangged vp their shildes & helmettes with the, these set forth thy bentys.

The prophet Ezechiel.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost roude aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vp the ir shildes roude aboute thy walles, and made the marvelous goodly. Tharsis occupi-de with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yron, tynne and lead, and made thy market greete. Jauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchautes, which brought the men, &
ornamentes off metall for thy occupyenge.
They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Martte, horse, hoisimen and mules. They off Dedan, were thy marchautes: and many other Isles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephant bones and paycockes for a present.
The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet,
with nedle worke, wth whyte lynnunge cloth,
with sylke and with Chustall.

Juda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also vsed marchaundies with the, in the best wyne and whyte woll: because thy occupienge was so greete, and thy wares so many. Dan, Jauan, and Meusal hane brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Casia and Calamus, according to thyne occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quysbys. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar hane occupied wth
the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchautes off Seba and Rema hane occupied also with the, in all cosily spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchautes off Saba, Mistria and Chelmad, were all doers with y^e
and occupied with the: In cosily rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, & therfore packte & boude together wth roapes) Rec and in Cedre wedde, at the tyme off y^e markettes. The shippes off Tharsis wrethe these off thy occupyenge.

Thus thou art full, and in greete worshipe, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But y^e east wynde shal ouer-beare the in to the myddest off the see: so y^e thy wares, thy marchaundies, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shal perlysh in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbes shall shake at the londe crie off thy shippmen. All wherry men, and all maryners vpon the see, shall leape out of their boates, and set them selues vpon the lode. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, & lye downe in the ashes. They shal haue them selues, & put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with hertfull sorrow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what cite hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is?
When thy wares & marchaundies came fro the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The Kynge off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perlyshed with the. All they that dwell in the Isles are abashed at the, and all their Kynge are afrayed, yee their faces haue changed colour. The marchautes of the na-cions wondre at the, In that thou art so cle-ne brought to naught, & comest nomore vp.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto
me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the prynce of Tyre: Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: I am a God, I haue my seate
in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man & not God, & yet
stondest in thine owne conceite, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thyntest thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from y^e. With thy wysdome & thy vnderste-dinge, thou hast gottē the greete welthynese, and gathered treasure of syluer & golde.
With thy greate wysdome and occupyenge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greates riches thy hert is proude.

Therfore thus saith y^e LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bryn-ge enemies vpon the, euen the tyrautes of the earth: these shal drawe out their swear-des vpon thy beuty and wysdome, and shall defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the middest off the see, as they that be slayne. Let se, yff thou wilt saye then (before the that slaye
y^e) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hondes of y^e enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Moreover, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kynge of Tyre, & tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a seale of a licnesse, full off wysdome & excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in y^e pleasānt gardē off God: thou art decre with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Chustall, Jacyncte, Onyx, Jaspis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, & golde. Thy beuty & y^e holes y^e be in y^e were set forth in the daye of y^e creacion. Thou art a sayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to couer.

E I haue set the vpon the holy mount off God, there hast thou bene, and walked amonge the sayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the. E Because off thy greate marchaundise, thy hert is full of wickednesse, & thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount off God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and destroye the amonge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in y^e sayre beuty, & thou & thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wysdome. I will cast y^e downe to the grounde, & y^e in y^e sight of kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sanctuary, wth the greate wickednesse off thy on-righteous occupyenge. I wil brynge a fyre from the myddest of the, to consume the: & wil make the to asshes, in the sight of all the y^e l^{et}te vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the heithē, shal be abashed at the: seinge thou art so clene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

E And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst Sidō, prophecie vpon it, and speake. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpon the, & get me honoure in the: that it maye be knone, how that I am y^e LORDE, when I punysh her, & get me honoure in her. For I will sende pestilence & bloud shedding into hir stretes, so y^e those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest of her: & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, & an hurtinge briere vnto the house of Israel, ner vnto the that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the household of Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be scatred: then shal I be sanctified in the, in y^e sight of the Gentiles: & they shal dwell in the lōde, y^e I gaue to my seruant Jacob. They shal dwell safely therein, buylde houses, and plante vnyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therein, when I haue punyshed all those, that despysed them rounde aboute: and then shall they knowe, y^e I am the LORDE their God.

The XXIX. Chapter.

In the x. yeare, vpon the xij. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, set now thy face agaynst Pharaō the kynge off Egypte, prophecie agaynst him and agaynst the whole lōde of Egypte: Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharaō thou kinge of Egypte, I wil vpon the, thou greate whall fysh, y^e lye in y^e waters: Thou y^e sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, & hāge all the fish in thy waters vpon thy scales: after y^e I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee & all the fish of y^e waters that hange vpon thy scales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lōde with the fish of thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, & for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egypte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of reed to the house of Israel. When they took holde of y^e wth their hōde thou brakest and prydest them on euery syde: and yff they leaned vpon the, thou brakest, & hurtdest the reynes of their backes. Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: beholde, I will brynge a swerde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beast. Yee the lōde of Egypte shalbe desolate and waiste, & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I myself haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, & vpon thy waters: I will make the lōde off Egypte waiste and desolate, from the towne of Syenes vnto the borders of the Morians lōde: so that in xl. yeares there shall no fore off man walke there, nether fote of cattell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the lōde of Egypte to be desolate amonge other waiste countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeares, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil scatre the Egipcians amonge the heithen and nacions.

Agayne, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Whē the xl. yeares are expyred, I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the nacions, amonge whō they were scatred, and wil brynge the presoners off Egypte agayne into the lōde off Pathures their owne na-

They shall nemoire be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke the enymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowethem: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

E In the xxvij. yere, the first daye of the first Moneth, came y^e worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate trauayle and labour to come before Tyre: that every heade maye be balde, and every shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether hym ner his hoost eny rewarde, for y^e greate trauayle y^e he hath taken there. Therfore thus saierth y^e LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lode of Egypte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon, y^e he maye take awaye all hir substaunce, robbe hir robberies, and spoyle hir spoyles, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egypte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the home off the house off Israel to growe forth, and open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XXX. Chapter.

E A Dour, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophesy and speake: thus saierth the LORDE God: Mourne, wo werth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of y^e LORDE is come: the darke daye of y^e heithen the houre is at honde, the swerde commeth vpon Egypte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egypte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundacions are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afrayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia and Lydia, all their comon people, and Chub, and all y^e be confederate vnto the, shal fall wth the thorow y^e swerde.

Thus saierth y^e LORDE: The maynteyners of the lode of Egypte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: enen vnto the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe wth the swerde, saierth y^e LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, and amonge other waist cities they shal be waisted. And they shal knowe, y^e I am y^e LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egypte, and when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messangers go forth frome in shippes, to make y^e carelesse Morians afrayed: and sorowe shal come vpon them in the daye of Egypte, for doubtles it shal come. Thus saierth the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egypte thorow the honde of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyauntes of the heithen shal be brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their swerdes vpon Egypte and fill the londe full of slaynemen. I wil drye vp their floudes of water, and sell the lode into the hondes of wicked people. The lode and all y^e is therein, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Eue I the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saierth the LORDE God: I wil destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Toph to an ende. There shal nemoire be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfulness will I sende into the Egipcians londe. As for Pathures, I wil make it desolate, and kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria will I punyssh, and poure my wroth full indignaciō vpon Sin, which is the strength of Egypte. All the sustaunce of Alexandria will I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egypte.

Sin shal be in greate heynesse, Alexandria shal be roted out and Toph shall haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Heliepolis and Bubasto shal be slayne with the swerde and caried awaye captiue. At Taphus the daye shal be darke, when I breake there the scepter of the lende of Egypte, and when y^e pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A cloude shal couer her, and hir daughters shal be led awaye into captiuite. Thus will I punyssh Egypte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

It happened in the xi. yere, vpon the seventh daye of y^e first Moneth, y^e the LORDE'S worde came vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man, I wil breake y^e arme of Pharao kynge of Egypte: and lo, it shal not be boude vnto be healed, nether shal eny playstre be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so stronge, as to holde a swerde. Therfore, thus saierth the LORDE God: beholde, I will vpon Pharao y^e kinge of Egypte, and brussle his stronge arme (yet is it but a broken one) and will smyte the swerde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatere them amonge the heithen, and strowe the in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strength y^e arme of the kinge of Babilon, and geue him my swerde in his honde: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so y^e he shal holde it before him piteously, like a wounded man.

Yee I will stablisch the kynge of Babilons arme, & the armes of Pharaos shal fall downe: that it maye be knowne, that I am the LORDE, which geueth the kynge off Babylon my swerde in his hōde, that he maye drawe it out vpon the londe of Egypte: and that when I scatthe the Egipcians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in y^e lōdes aboute, they maye knowe, y^e I am the LORDE.

The XXXI. Chapter.

A Ezc 29. Quier, it happened in the xi. yere y^e first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharaos the kynge of Egypte, ad to all his people: Whom art thou like in y^e greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpon the mount of Libanus, with fayre braunches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greace, and the depe set him vp an hye. Rōūde aboute the roces of hun rāne there floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therefore was he hyer thā all the trees of the felde, and thorow y^e multitude of waters that he sent frō him, he op- tayne many and longe braunches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his braunches, vnder his bowes gedred all the beastes of y^e felde, & vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Fayre and beutifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his roce stode besyde greace waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasaunt garden of God, there was no fyre tre like his braunches, the playnetrees were not like y^e bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, y^e all the trees in the pleasaunt gardē of God, had enye at hi. Therefore, thus saicth the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, & stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, & seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil delyuer him in to y^e hondes of y^e mightiest amōge y^e heithē, which shall rote him out. Accordyng to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, & the mighty men of the heithen shall so scatthe him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes & in all valleys: his bowes shal be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all y^e foules of y^e ayre shal sit vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his braunches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shal attayne to his hyennesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, necher shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be delyuered vnder the earth, and go downe to y^e graue, like other men.

Morouer, thus saicth the LORDE God: In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I wil couer the depe vpon him, I wil staunch his floudes, and the greace waters shal be restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be sorowfull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shal be smytē. I wil make the heithen shake at the sounge of his fall, when I cast him downe to hell, with them y^e descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eden, w^{ch} all the chosen and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitaciōs: for they shal go downe to hell wth him, vnto thē th. it be slayne with the swerde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amōge the heithē. To whom shalt thou be likened, that art so glorious & greace, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder y^e earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne wth the swerde. Euen thus is it with Pharaos & all his people, saicth the LORDE God.

The XXXII. Chapter.

In the xij. yere, the first daye of the xij. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpon Pharaos the kynge of Egypte, & saye vnto him: Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the heithen, & as a whal fish in the see. Thou castest y^e waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters wth thy fete, and stampest in their floudes. Thus saicth the LORDE God: I wil spredde my net ouer y^e, namely, a greace multitude of people: these shal dryue the into my yarne, for I will cast the vpon the lōde, and let the lye vpon the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye sit vpon the: I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpon the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyennesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the mountaynes, & y^e valleys shal be full off the.

Bspredde a cloude ouer the Sonne, and the Moone shall not geue hir light. All the lightes off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bunge darcknesse vpon thy londe, saith y^e LORDE God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bunge thy destruccion amonge the heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so a frayd thorow y^e, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, every man in him self, at y^e daye of thy fall.

For thus saith the LORDE God: the kyng of Babilons swerde shal come vpon y^e, with y^e swerdes of the worthies will I smyte & dorene thy people. All they that be mightie amonge the Gētiles, shal waiste the proude pompe of Egipte, and brynge downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nemoie vpo the waters: so that nether māns foete ner beastes clawe, shal steepe them enymore. Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, saith the LORDE God: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when y^e countre with all that is therein, shal be layde waiste: and whē I smyte all thē which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mournyng, that the daughters off the heithen shall make: Yee a sorow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saith the LORDE God.

In the xij. yeare, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee and themightie people of the heithē also, even with thē that dwell bench: and with them that go downe in to the grane. Downe (how sayre soeuer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amonge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen already. he shal be drawen forth and all his people.

DThe mightie worthies and his helpers, y^e be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with y^e swearde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, and their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne and fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his grane: alltogether wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare into y^e

The xxxij. Chap.

londe off the lyuynge.

There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the lyuynge: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to y^e grane.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised; and with them that be slaythorow the swearde: for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the lyuynge a frayd, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircumcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the lyuynge a frayd.

Shalde not they then lye also amonge y^e worthies, and vncircumcised Gyautes? which wth their weapens are gone downe to hel: whose swerdes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare into y^e lōde of y^e lyuynge. Yee amonge the vncircumcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, which wth their strength are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Moreover, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidonians, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to y^e pytte. Now when Pharaoscyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharaos and all his hoost, saith y^e LORDE God. For I haue geue my feare in the lōde of the lyuynge. But Pharaos and all his people shal lye amonge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saith the LORDE God.

4. Re. 9. d W Gayne, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Speake to the childre of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: yf same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe, shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Yff a man now heare the noyse off the trompet: & will not be warned, and the swearde come ad take him awaye: his bloude shall be vpo his owne heade: For he herde the soude of the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therfore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnynge, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watchman se the swearde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so yf the people is not warned: yff the swearde come then, and take eny man from amonge the: the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

Eze. 3. c W And now (O thou sonne of man) I have made the a watchman vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yff I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou guesst him not warnynge, that he maye beware off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deliuered thy soule.

Eze. 18. c Therfore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, & saye thus: Oure offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, but moch rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lye. Turne you, turne you from yo^r vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

Eze. 18. d C Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: The righteuousnes of the righteous shall not saue him, when so euer he turneth awaye vnfaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, when so euer he conuerteth from his vngodlyne:

And y^e righteuousnesse of the righteous shal not saue his life, when so euer he syn-nerth. Yff I saye vnto the righteous, that he shall surely lye, and so he trust to his owne righteuousnesse, and do synne: then shall his righteuousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yff I saye to the wicked: thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne fro his synnes, and do the thinge that is lafull and right: In so moch that the same wicked man geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the comaundementes off life, and doth no wronge:

Then shall he surely lye, and not dye. See the synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moch as he doth now the thinge that is lafull and right, he shall lye. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnright.

When the righteous turneth from his righteuousnesse, and doeth the thinge that is wicked, he shall dyetherfore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lafull and right, he shall lye therfore. Yet ye saye: the waye of y^e LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yeare, the v. daye of the x. moeth of eure captyuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Jerusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: y^e cite is destroyed. Then the honde of the LORDE had bene vpon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyll the morynge that he came to me: & he opened my mouth, so yf I was nomore demine. Then came the worde of y^e LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, theser that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, ad he had the londe in possessio: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saith the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, youre eyes haue ye lye vnto Idols, and haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swerdes, ye worke abominacions, euery one defyleth his neyghbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou theser wordes vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lye, all ye that dwell in this wilderness, shall be slayne wth the swearde: what so is vpon the Unto the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, prophesye agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophesye, and speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede y^e flockes?

shepe are robbed, and deuoured off all the wyde beestes off the felde, hauynge no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therfore heare y^e worde off the LORDE God: Beholde, I my selff will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their bondes, and make the cease from fedynge of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues no more: For I will deliuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will loke to my shepe my selff, and seeke them. Like as a shepherde amonge the flocke seeketh after the shepe that are scatted abroad, euen so will I seeke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatted in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bunge them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the countre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hye mountaynes off Israel shall there foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes of Israel.

I will fede my shepe my selff, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seeke: soch as go astraye, wil I bringe agayne: soch as be wounded, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykynge, these will I preserve, and fede them with y^e thinge that is lausfull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, amonge the withers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture wth youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

homes, so longe till ye have utterly scatted them abroad. I wil helpe my shepe, so y they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discern one shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherde: euen my seruauit David, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherde. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my seruauit David shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Morouer, I wil make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryne all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the woddes. Good fortune z prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wode maye bunge forth their frutes, z y ground be hir increase. They shal be safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue broke their yocke, and deliuered them out of the bondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore be spoyled of the heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lōde: but safely shal they dwell, z no man shall fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so y they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprove of y heithen eny more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am w them, z y they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saith the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: and I am youre God, saith the LORDE God.

The XXXV. Chapter.

A Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towarde the mount Seir, prophesy vpon it, z saye vnto it: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waist z desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, z thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. For so moch as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, z with a cruel honde hast made them afayed, whattyme as they were troubled z punyshed for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lyue (saith y LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shall bloude persecute the. from thence. His mountaynes wil I fill w his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shal lye full of them, that are slayne with y swearde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderness, so that noman shal dwell in thy cities: y ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE.

And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nations and both these londes must be myne, z I wil haue them in possession, where as the LORDE was there. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will handle the a cordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amonge them, how I haue punyshed the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyreful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waist, and geuen vs to deuoure.

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee z multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saith y LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waist. And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: euen so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, z knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Thou sonne of man, prophesy vpon the mountaynes of Israel, z speake: Heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Because yo^r enemy hath sayde vpon you: A ha, y hie euerlastyng places are now become ours: prophesy therefore, z speake: thus saith y LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted z trodē downe on euery syde, z become a possession vnto y resydue of y Gētiles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes z vnto an euil name amonge y people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys z dales, to the voyde wildernesses z desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the resydue of the heithē: Yee eue thus saith the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuyce, agaynst the resydue of the Gētiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue takē in my lōde vnto the selues for a possession: which also reioysed frō their whole herte w a despyteful stemacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it.

The prophet Ezechiel.

B Prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto y^e mountaynes and hilles, to valleyes and dales, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I denyed in my gealousy and terrible wrath: For so moch as ye haue suffered reprove of the heithen, therfore thus saith the LORDE God: I haue sworne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bunge forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you will I turne me, that ye maye be tyllid and sown. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and y^e decayed places shal be repayred againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase & bunge frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes the euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe, y^e I am the LORDE. See people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and then shal be their inheritance, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. A gayne, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as they saie vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eat no more men, nether destroye thy people enymore, saith the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from henceforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprove of the nations, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saith the LORDE God.

C Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of man, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne ground, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes & ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the uncleynesse of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wrath full displeasure vpon them, because of the bloud that they had shed in the londe, & because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scatred them also amonge the heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lodes. Acordinge to their wayes & after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punyssh them.

D Now when they were gone vnto the heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe? Then spared I my holy name, which y^e house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therfore tell y^e house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I do not this for yo^r sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amonge the heithen, when ye came to them. Therfore, I wil halowe my greete name agayne, which amonge the Gentiles is euil spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amonge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith y^e LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bunge you agayne in to youre owne londe. Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, & ye shalbe cleane: Rec from all youre uncleynesse and from all yo^r Idols shal I cleanse you. A new herte also wil I geue you, and a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony herte, I will take it out of youre body, and geue you a fleschy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commandementes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to yo^r forefathers, & ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre uncleynesse, I wil call for the come, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no hunger. I will multiplie the frutes of the trees and y^e increase of the felde for ye, so that ye shal beare no more reprove of hunger amonge the heithen. Then shal ye remembre yo^r owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginacions, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

E But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therfore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal close you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repaire the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waste, in the sight of all them, that wete by. Then shal it be sayde: This waste lode is become like a garden of pleasure, and the veyde, desolate and broke downe cities, are now stronge, and fenced agayne. Then the residue of the heithen that lye rounde aboute ye, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repaire that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waiste. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

11 re. 50. a Thus saith the LORDE God; I wil yet once be founde agayne of y^e house of Israel, & do this for them: I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Jerusalem are in the hie solempne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

21 The honde of the LORDE came vpon me, & caried me out in the spirc of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & behelde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & maruelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these be-nes maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: Prophecye thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breth in to you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with skynne: & so geue you breth, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Gene. 2. b

1. Cor. 15. a

So I prophesied, as he had commaunded me. And as I was prophecieng, there came a noyse and a greatemocion, so that the bones rayne euery one to another. Now when I had looked, beholde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboue they were covered with skynne, but there was no breth in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man, prophecie thou toward the wynde: prophcie, and speake to the wynde: Thus saith the LORDE God: Come (o thou ayre) from the foure wyndes, & blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophesied, as he had commaunded me: Then came the breth vnto them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their feete, a maruelous greatesorte.

q. 51. 22. 2

Morouer, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye: oure bones are dryed vp, oure hope is gone, we are clene cut of. Therefore prophecie thou, & speake vnto them. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) & take you out of youre sepulcres, & bringe you in to the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe y^e I am the LORDE, when I open your graues, & bringe you out of them. My spirc also wil I put in you, & ye shall lyue: I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take a sticke and wyte vpon it: Vnto Juda & to the children of Israel his companions. Then take another sticke, and wyte vpon it: Vnto Joseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the housholde of Israel his companions. And than take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stycke therof. Now yf the childre of thy people saye vnto the: wilt thou not shewe vs, what thou meanest by these? Then geue them this answer: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil take the stocke of Joseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim and of the trybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Juda, & make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wytest, shalt thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saye vnto them:

Ofces. 1. b

Thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil take awaye the childre of Israel from amonge the heithen, vnto whom they be gone, and wil gather them together ouer euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe: yee I wil make one people of the in y^e londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall no more be two peoples frem henceforth, neither be deuyled in to two kingdomes: they shal also defyle the selues no more with their abominacions, Idols and all their wicked-doinges. I wil helpe the out of all their dwelling places, wher in they haue synned: & wil so clense them, that they shal be my people, and I their God.

Dauid my seruant shal be their kinge, & they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commandementes shal they both kepe & fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my seruant, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee enē in the same londe shal they, their children, & their childrens children dwell for euermore: and my seruant Dauid shal be their euerlastyng prince. Morouer, I will make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlastyng couenaunt. I wil sattel the also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge the for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe wth them, yee I wil becheir God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y^e holymaker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them foreuer more.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

Eze. 19.
Apo. 10. c

When the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towarde Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chiefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal: prophesy agaynst him, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: O Gog thou chiefe pryncce of Mesech and Tubal: behold, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the aboute, and put a bytt in thy chawes: I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse & horjmen, which be all weapened of the best fashion: a greate people, that handle altogether speares, shyldes, and swerdes: the Perses, Morjans and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes: Gomer, and all his hoostes: the house of Thogorma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

Therefore prepare the, see thy self in araye with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and be thou their defence. A few many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeares thou shalt come in to the lode, that hath bene destroyed with the swerde, & now is replenished agayne wth dyuerse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which haue lōgelyen waist. See they be brought out of the nacions, & dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lode, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many thinges come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt ymagyn myschefe, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, semge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor doores) to spoyle them, to robbe the, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, y^e is gathered together from amonge the heithē, which haue gotten corne & land good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchauntes of Tharsis wth all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle: to take syluer and golde: to cary awaye catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

The xxxix. Chap.

Therefore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophesie, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saith the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwelleth safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people wth the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an innumerable sorte. See thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the lode. This shal come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the heithen maye knowe me, when I get me honoure vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art he, of whom I haue spoken aforetyme, by my seruantes y^e prophetes of Israel, which prophesied in those dayes & yeaeres, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog cometh vp in to the londe of Israel (saith the LORDE God) shal my indignaciō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure I haue deuysed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fyshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the beestes of the felde, and all the men y^e are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vp side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swerde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saith the LORDE God: so that enery mans swerde shal be vpon another. With pestilence and bloude wil I punyssh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the heithen: that they maye be sure, how y^e I am y^e LORDE.

The XXXIX. Chapter.

Therfore o thou sonne of man, prophesie agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: thou chiefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute, & carie the forth, & lede y^e from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arrowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Then wil I gene the vnto y^e foules and wilde beastes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for enē I the LORDE have spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

B Into Magog, and amonge those that sit so carelesse in the Isles: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, y I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I will not let my holy name be euel spoken of enymore: but the very heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it cometh, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saith the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I have spoken: They that dwell in y cities of Israel, shal go forth and set fyre vpon the weapons, and burne them: shylde and speres, bowes and arrowes, bylles and clubbes: seven yeares shal they be burnynge therof, so that they shall els bunge no sticke from y felde, nether have ned to hew downe eny out of the wodde: For they shal have weapons ynew to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saith y LORDE God.

C At the same tyme will I gene vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, where thorow men go from the east to the see warde. Those that trauaile therby, shal abhorre it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seven monethes longe shal the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye clense the lode: For all the people of the londe shal burie them. It shal be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saith the LORDE God. They shal ordeine men also to be deedburiers, ever goinge thorow the lode, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be clensed. From ende to ende shal they seeke, and that vñ monethes lōge. Now those that go thorow the londe, where they see a mans bone, they shal set vp a token by it, till the deedburiers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamona: Thus shal they make the londe clene.

D And thou sonne of man: thus saith the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and every byde, yee and to all the wilde bestes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather you roude aboute vpd my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euen a greete slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: Apo. 19. d eate flesh, and drynke bloude. Ye shal eate y flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the oxen that be all slayne at Basan. Eate y fat you re bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be dronged of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Syl you at my table, with horses & stronge horsmen: with captaines and all me of warre, saith the LORDE God.

The xl. Chap. Ho. lxxij.

I will bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the heithen maye see my iudgment, that I haue kepte, and my honde which I haue layed vpon them: that y house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am y LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the heithen shal knowe, that where as E the house of Israel were led into captiuite: it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and deliuered them in to the hondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swearde. Accordinge to their uncleanness and vnfaithfull dealinges, so haue I emtreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therefore thus saith y LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captiues of Jacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them a frayde. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led into captiuite amonge the heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nomore from them, but will poure out my sprete vpon the house of Israel, saith the LORDE Eze. 36. d God.

The xl. Chapter.

A In the xxv. yeare of oure captiuite, 21 in the begynnynge of the yeare, the x. daye of the moneth: that is the riij. yeare, after that y cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel brought heme in the visions of God: and set me downe vpd a marvelous hie mountayne, wher vpon there was a byldinge (as it hao bene of a cite) towarde the north.

The prophet Ezechiel.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a chrede of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, & sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so ever I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therfore art thou brought hither. And what sooner thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

B Beholde, there was a wall on the one syde rounde aboute the house: the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vp the staires, & measured the postes of the dore: wherof euery one was a meterodde thicke. Every chambre was a meterodde longe and brode: betwene the chambers were fyue cubites. The poste of the dore within the porche, was one meterodde. He measured also the porche of the ynnnermer dore, which conteyned a meterodde. The heyth of the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eght cubites, and his pilers two cubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde: alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xii cubites. The edge before the chambers was one cubite brode vpon both the sydes, & the chambers six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured yf dore from the rygge of one chambre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entrie of the ynnnermer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto yf dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

C Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chambers & paved workes, made in yf fore courte rounde aboute: xxx chambers vpon one paved worke. Now the paved worke was a lōge besyde the dores, and that was the lower paved worke. After this, he measured yf bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnnermer courte of the out syde, which had an hundred cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the vttemost courte toward the north, measured he after the lēgth and bredth: his thre chambers also on either syde, with his pilers & fore entries: which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites: his wyndowes & porches with his date trees, had euen lēgth measure as the dore toward the east: there where viij steppes to go vp vpon, & their porche before them. Now yf dore of the ynnnermer courte stode straighe ouer agaynst the dore, that was toward yf north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, wherethere stode a dore toward yf south: whose pilers and porches he measured, these had the fyrst measure, & with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, yf bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon: his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnnermer courte stode toward the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to yf ynnnermer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde: which he measured, & it had the measure afore sayde. In like maner, his chambers, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hie, & xxv cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto yf vttemost courte: vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnmost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, according to yf measure afore sayde. His chambers, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had: & with his porches he had wyndowes rounde aboute. The heyth was l cubites, yf bredth xxv cubites: his porches reached vnto the vttemost courte: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the fore sayde measure. His chambers, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute: whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode toward the vttemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose intraunce was at the dore pilers, and therethe burnt offringes were washed.

The prophet Ezechiel.

In the dore pouche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge: to slaye the brentoffringes, synneoffringes and trespassoffringes thereupon. And on the outsyde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure stables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, wherupon they slaughtered. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burnt offringes, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: wherupon were layed y vessels and ornamentes, which were used to, the burnt & slayne offeringes, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes foure syngers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hangge flesh vpon, & vpon the tables was layed the offringe flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnemmer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde y north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also, besyde the east dore north warde.

1. Par. 22. 2
1. Reg. 2. 1

And he sayde vnto me: This chambrie on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayre vpon the altar: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Levi. So he measured the forecourte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the altar stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on ether syde, was thie cubites. The length of the pouche was xx cubites. the bredth xi. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on ether syde one.

The XL. Chapter.

After this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vi. cubites thicke, acordinge to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of y dore was x. cubites, & the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length thereof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. The wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore itself was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was viij. cubites. He measured the length and bredth thereof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambries y

stode rounde aboute y house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpon another, wherof there were xxxij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare the vp: but in y wall of y house they were not fastened: The syde chambries were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute y house. Thus was it wyder aboute, that from the lowest men might go to the hyest & mydde chambers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambries was a meterodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, & so dyd y outwall of the chambers in y house.

Betwene the chambries, was the wydenesse xx. cubites rounde aboute y house. The chambrie dores stode ouer agaynst the out wall, the one dore was towarde the north, y other towarde the south: and the thicknesse of the outwall was v cubites rounde aboute. Now the buyldinge that was separated towarde the west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke rounde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites longe also. The wydenesse before the house and of it y was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chambers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnemmer temple, the porch of the forecourte, y syde postes, these thie had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vnto the wyndowes: The wyndowes themselves were syled ouer with bordes: & thus was it aboue the dore, vnto the ynnmost house, and without also: See the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer wth greace bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euery betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, y face of a man lookinge asyde towarde the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made rounde aboute in all the house: See the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vpon aboue the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypostes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euery as it appeared vnto me afore in y vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and enery dore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on enery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greater thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpō both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The XLII. Chapter.

A Then caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, & brought me in to the chambie that stode ouer agaynst the backe buyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites. ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnemmer courte, & agaynst the pauced worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer agaynst another: And before this chambie there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hyest chambies were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmost of y buildinge: for they bare chambie vpon chambie, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.

B The wall without that stode by y chambies towarde the vttemost ceurte vpon the fore syde of the chambies, was L. cubites longe: for the length of y vttemost chambies in the fore courte was L. cubites also: but the length therof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambies had vnder them an inraunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chambers also which, had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inraunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee even like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the waye towarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stode before the backe buyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, muste eat the most holy offringes: and there must they laye the most holy offringes: meat offringes, synne offringes & trespass offringes, for it is an holy place. When the prestes cometherin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seyng they be holy) they shall leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue any thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnemmer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with y meter odde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meter oddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so much. The other two sydes also towarde the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meter oddes. So he measured all y foure sydes where there wente a wall rounde aboute v. C. meter oddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholy.

The XLIII. Chapter.

S He brought me to y dore, that turneth towarde the east. Beholde, there came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Eobar. Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me in to y ynnemmer courte: & beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: O thou sonne of man, this rownie is my seate, and the place of my fote steppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: neither thei, ner their kinges, thorow their whoredome, thorow their hie places, & thorow the

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherfore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put awaye their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonger them for euermore. Therfore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the housholde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure tham selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and description therof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, y they maye kepe & fulfill all the fashions and customes therof.

C This is the description of the house: A boone vpon the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shalbe y holiest of all. Beholde, that is the description and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the aulter (after the true cubite, which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heyth of the aulter: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, & the bredth but one cubite.

Exo. 27. 2

The aulter was foure cubites hie, & from the aulter vwarde stode foure hornes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brede, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the aulter was xij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the easte. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saith the LORD God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the aulter, in the daye when it is made, to offre burnt offrings, and to sprenkle bloudether vpon. To the prestes, to y Leuites that be of the seide of Sadoch, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saith the LORD God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: & take the bloude of him & sprenkle his foure hornes withal, & the foure corners of the aulter coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: he re with shalt thou cleanse it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the synoffringe, & burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

Leui. 15. f

The nexte daye, take a goot buck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the aulter withall: like as it was reconciled with y bullocke. Now when thou hast made it cleane, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: Offre them before the LORD, and let the prest cast salt therupon, and geue them so vnto the LORD for a burnt offringe. Seuen dayes shalt thou bringe, every daye a goot bucke. A yonge bullocke & a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and cleanse the aulter, & offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and so forth, the prestes shal offre their burnt offrings and health offrings vpon y aulter: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saith the LORD God.

The XLIII. Chapter.

After this, he brought me agayne to y ourwarde dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORD vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny man to go thorow it, but only for the LORD God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The prynce himself shal come thorow it, that he maye eate bred before the LORD. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. Then brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I looked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORD fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORD spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligence to all that I wil saye vnto thee, concerninge all the ordinaunces of the LORD and all his lawes: ponde well with thine herte the comynge in of the house and the goinge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate housholde of Israel: Thus saith the LORD God: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abheminacons, Shulde I use them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce y^e is done therein? But the prestes y^e Levites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kept the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone from me: shall come to me, to do me seruyce, to stand before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORD God.

This shalbe his owne lode in Israel, that my princes be no more chargeable vnto my people. And soch as remayneth yet ouer in the londe, shalbe geuen to the house of Israel acordinge to their trybes. Thus saith the LORDE God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leaue of, handle now acordinge to the thinge, that is equall and lausfull: and thrust out my people nomore, sayeth y LORDE God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

The Epha & the Bat shalbe a like. One Bat shal cōteyne y tēth parte of an homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after y homer. One Sycle maketh xx. Seras. So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xxv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the heaue offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaued: namely, the xxv. parte of an Epha, out of an homer of wheat: and the xxv. parte of an Epha, out of an homer of barlie. Ten Battes make one homer: for one homer maketh ten Battes. And one labe from two hundred shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōcile them, sayeth the LORDE God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces parte to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynkoffrynges vnto the LORDE, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, brientoffrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recōcile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth y LORDE God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemyshe, and cleanse the Sanctuary.

So the priest shal take of the bloude of y synoffrynge, and sprentle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure comers of the aulter, with the dore postes of the ynnmer courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of y moneth (for soch as haue synned of ignorance, or beyng disceaned) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon y xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter.

Seuē dayes shal the feast continue, wherein there shal no sower ner leuēd bred be eatē.

The xlii. Chap. Ho. lxxv.

Vpon the same daye shal y pryncce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are without blemyshe, for a burntoffrynge vnto the LORDE: & an he gaote daylie for a synoffrynge. Vpon y xv. daye of the seuenth moneth, he shal kepe the seuen dayes holy one after another, eue as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burntoffrynge, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The XLVI. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORDE God: y dore of the ynnmer courte toward the east, shal be shut the vij. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shalbe opened. Then shal the pryncce come vnder the dore porche, & stonde still without by the dore cheke. So y priestes shal offre vp his burnt & healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipec at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but y dore shal nomore be shut till the euenyng.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipec before the LORDE, without his dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the pryncce shal bunge vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemyshe, & a ram without blemyshe, and an Epha for a meatoffrynge, with y ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, & an hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke without blemyshe, sixe lambes & a ram also without blemyshe. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatoffrynge: but to y lambes, what he maye come by: And euen an hin of oyle to an Epha. When the pryncce cometh, he shal go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipec, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at y north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth righte ouer on the other syde, and the pryncce shal go in and out amonge them.

a bullock, and an Ephra to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but ever an hin of oyle to an Ephra. Now when the pryncce bryngeth a burnt offering or an health offering with a fre wil vnto the LORD, the east dore shalbe opened vnto him, y he maye do with his burnt & health offerings, as he doth vpon the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie brynge vnto the LORD a lambe of a yere olde without blemish for a burnt offering: this shal he do every mornynge. And for a meat offering he shal geue the sixte parte of an Ephra, & the thirde parte of an hin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) every mornynge. Meethis shalbe a daylie meat offering vnto the LORD, for an euerlasting ordinance: & thus shal the lambe, the meat offering and oyle be geuen every mornynge, for a daylie burnt offering.

Moreover, thus sayeth the LORD God: If the pryncce geue a gifte vnto any of his soimes, then shall it be his soimes heritage perpetuall, y he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruantes some of his heritage, it shall be his to the fre yere, and the to retorne agayne vnto y pryncce: for his heritage shalbe his soimes only. The pryncce also shal take none of the peoples inheritance, ner put the from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abode, but that every man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the inheritance at the syde of the dore to y habitation of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to y prestes and stode towarde the north, & beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shal dight the trespase and syn offerings, & bake y meat offerings: that they nede not beare the in to the outwarde court, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vttemost court, rounde aboute all the foure comers. Beholde, in every corner of y fore court, there was yet a litle court. And in all the foure comers of the court, there was made a litle court of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, & there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were hartes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the echin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the flayne offerings of the people.

The XLVII. Chapter.

The xlvij. Chap.

After this he brought me agayne besore the dore of the house: & beholde, there gusheth out waters from vnder y postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode towarde the east) that ranne downe vpon the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the altier south warde. The caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the vttemost dore, y turneth eastwarde. Beholde, there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now when the man y had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east dore, he measured a lxx. cubites, & the he brought me thorow y water, en to the angles: so he measured yet a thousande, & brought me thorow y water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, y I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded euer. And he sayde vnto me: hast then sene this, o thou sonne of man: and with that, he brought me to the ryuer bank agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer backe. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out towarde the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, cometh in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, & maketh the waters whole. And all that line and moue, where vnto this ryuer cometh, shal recover. And where this water cometh, there shalbe many fsh. For all that cometh to this water, shal be lusty and whole. By this riner shal the fshers stonde from Engaddi vnto Eneglaim, & there spiede out their nettes: for there shalbe greate heapes of fsh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, neither shal their frute perishe: but euer be type at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. This frute is good to eate, and his leafe profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORD God: Let this be the border, wherein ye shall denyde the londe vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which lode I swore vnto your fathers, that it shoulde fall to youre inheritance.

1 Re. 14. 2
2. Par. 16. C

In y^e thirde yeare of y^e raigne of Joachim kynge off Juda, came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Jerusalem, & beseged it: and the LORDE deliuered Joachim the kynge off Juda in to his honde, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried awaye vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god and there broughethem in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes y^e chiefe chamberlayne, that he shoulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynes sede and of prynces, yonge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but fayre and wel fauored, instructe in all wisdom, connyng and vnderstodunge: which were able to stonde in the kynes palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kynge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he dranke himself, so to nourish the thre yeare: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Juda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chiefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Azarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt wth himself, that he wolde not be defyled thow the kynes meate, ner y^e wyne which he dranke. And this he desyred off the chiefe chamberlayne, lest he shoulde defyle himself. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before y^e chiefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, and so ye shal make me lose my heade vnto y^e kynge.

Gen. 43. E
Iob 1. b
Iudic. 12. A

Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chiefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs hane potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynes meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter, and proued the x. dayes. And after y^e ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge & fatter, then all the yonge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynes meate.

The ii. Chap. Ho. lxxvij.

Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes connyng and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstodunge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yonge spryngaldes vnto him: the chiefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge communed with them. But amonge them all were founde none soch as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Azarias. Therfore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstodunge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, the all the soythsayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yeare of kynge Cyrus.

The II. Chapter

In the secode yeare off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, where thow his spiere was vered, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge commaunded to call together all y^e soythsayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, & my spiere was so troubled therewith, y^e I haue cleue forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answer, and sayde: It is gone from me: If ye wil not make me vnderstande the dreame with the interpretacion theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be pryed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meaning therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the significacion of it. They answered a gayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceave off a treuth, that ye do but prologe y^e tyme: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone from me. Therfore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all hane one indgmenr. But ye fayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to put off the tyme. Therfore tell me the dreame, and so shal I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it mea-neth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which yf kynge speaketh of: Yet there is nether kynge pryncer nor LORDE, that euer aied soch thinges at a soyth saye, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyeth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

C For yf which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciō, and cōmaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and yf proclamacion wōte forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cōpanyons. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynges steward, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth alreȝ, to kyll soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kynge's debyte: Why hath the kynge proclaimed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kynge, yf he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretation: and then came he home agayne & shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael & Azarias his companiōs: yf they shulde beseeke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other soch as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel praysed yf God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be praysed for euer and euer, for wysdome and strength are his owne: he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde he openeth the depe secretēs: he knoweth yf the thyng that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him. I thanke the, and prayse the (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, & hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynge's matter vnto me.

Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kynge had ordered to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not soch as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kynge, and I shal shewe the kynge the interpretation. Then Arioch brought Daniel into the kynge in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue found be a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, yf shal shewe the kynge the interpretation. The answered the kynge, and sayde vnto Daniel, whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, yf cast shewe me yf dreame, which I haue sene, & the interpretation therof? Daniel answered the kynge to his face, and sayde: As for this secrete, for the which the kynge maketh inquisition: it is nether the wyse, the soicerer, the charmer nor the deuell coniuier, that can certifie the kynge off it: Only God in heauē cā open secretēs, and he it is, that sheweth the kynge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kynge, thou didest cast in thy mynde, what shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secrete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more then eny other kynge: but only that I might shewe the kynge the interpretation, & that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kynge sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose fygure was maruelous greate, and his vy sage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body ad loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte off earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (with out eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake the to poulder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from yf some floores, that they cā nore be founde. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kynge, what it meaneth.

O kynge, thou art a kynge off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geue the a kingdom, ryche, strength and maiesly: & hath delyuered the all thinges, that are amonge yf childien off men: the beastes off the felde, & the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Then art that golde heade. After yf there shal aryse another kingdom, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrd kingdom shal be lyke copper, and haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth king-home shall be as stronge as yron. For like as yron brusseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beatech euery thinge downe, so shall it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyled kyngdome, which neuertheles shall haue some off the yron grounde myxe with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron myxe with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, significch: that it shall be a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxe with claye: they shall myngle them selues wth y^e sede off symple people, z yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wth not be souldered with a porcherde.

Esa. 9. b In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an everlastinge kyngdome which shall not perishe, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

Heb 11. c And where as thou sawest, that without eny bondes there was cut out of the mounte a stone, which brake the yron, the copper y^e earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath y^e greate God shewed the kyng, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kyng Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meate off rynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kyng answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kyng made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lorde of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kyng for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers over all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the courte by the kyng.

ke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon z sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes z nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites ad shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: y^e they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kyng had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them together, and came vnto the dedicacyng of y^e ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kyng had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out wth all his might: O ye people, kynnedes and tungen, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shall be blowne, wth y^e harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphomes and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipec the golden ymage, y^e Nabuchodonosor the kyng hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shall euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphomes and all kynde of Melody: the all the people, kynnedes and naciones fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kyng had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused y^e Jewes, and sayde vnto kyng Nabuchodonosor: O kyng, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beynge kyng hast geuen a commaundement, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so the fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certayne Jewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offices of the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kyng) regarde not thy commaundement, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, y^e Sydrac, Misac z Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kyng. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what o Sydrac

The prophet Daniel.

Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddesses: nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp: wel, be redy herafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trumpettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshippe the ymage which I haue made. But yff ye worshippe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, y maye deliuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kynge, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto y in this matter, for why: oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hote burnynge ouen (O kynge) and can right wel deliuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (O kynge) that we will not serue thy goddesses, ner do reuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that y countenance of his face chaunged vpo Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charged and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wote to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, and cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kynges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was excedyng hote. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in y hote burnynge ouen, being fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his counceill and sayde: dyd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kynge: Yee O kynge. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothyng corrupte: and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wote Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he spake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruauntes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges counceill came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies: In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes vunchanged: Yee there was no smell of fyre felt vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: Blessed be the God of Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, and defended his seruauntes, that put their trust in him: y haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies ther vpon: rather then they wolde serue or worshippe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaunde, that all people, kynneddes & tungen, which speake any blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe pryed: Because, there is no God y maye sane, as this. So the kynge promoted Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.

Nabuchodonosor kynge, vnto all people, kynneddes and tungen that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amōge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokēs & maruelous workes, y y hye God hath wrought vpon me. O how greate are his tokēs, & how mightie are his wonders: This kyngdome is an euerlastinge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for ever and euer.

The III. Chapter.

Nabuchodonosor beyng at rest in myne house, and flourishing in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me astrayed: and the thoughtes that I had vpo my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wysdome at Babilō shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretation of the dreame. So there came the soychsayers, charmers, Caldees and conuurers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, according to the name of my God) which hath the spere of the holy goddess in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou pryncce of saychsayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the spere of the holy goddess, and no secreete is hyd from the: tel me therefore, what y visio of my dreame (y I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde, which was very hye, greate and mightie: y heyth reached vnto the heauē, and the briedth extended to all the endes of the earth: his leaves were sayre, he had very moch frute, so y every mā had ynough to eate therin.

B The beastes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed of it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: & beholde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mighte ly, sayenge: Hew downe the tre, breake off his braunches, shake of his leaves, and scatter his frute abrode: that all the beestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his braunches. Neuertheles leaue the grounde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parre in the herbes of the grounde with other wyld beastes.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen huli, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This crande of the watcher, is a cōmaundement grounded and sought out in the counceyl off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hyest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, and geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, y I kyng Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therfore o Balthasar, telle thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for y spire of the holy Goddes is in the.

C Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre and his thoughtes troubled him. So the kyngge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my LORD, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greates & mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaves were sayre, and the frute moch: vnder the which the beastes of the felde had their habitacion, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

des of the earth. But where as the kyngge sawe a watcher euē an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the grounde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: He shall be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parre shall be with the beestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (o kyng) is y interpretaciō, yee it is the very deuycce of him, y is hyest of all, & it toucheth my LORD the kyngge.

Thou shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shall be with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an oxe. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, & geueth them, to whom he lyst. Moreover, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be beleft still in the ground: it betokeneth, y thy kyngdome shall remayne whole vnto y, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power cometh from heauen. Wherefore (o kyng) be contēt with my counceyl, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightuousnesse, and thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thinges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kyng Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kyngge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greates cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power & strength) haue made a kynges court, for the honoure off my magesty. Whyle these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heauē, sayenge: O kyng Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be cast out of mens company: thy dwellinge shall be with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an oxe, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euē vntill thou knowest, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vpon Nabuchodonosor: so that he was cast out off mens cōpany, & ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as greates as Agles feathers, and his nailes like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, Nabuchodonosor

At the same tyme was myne vnderstandyng geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honour of my kyngdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My greatesates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshippe.

The dyd I Nabuchodonosor, loane, magnifie and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

The V. Chapter.

Althasar the kyng made a greate bancket to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken wth wyne, he commaunded to brynge him y golden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Jerusalem: that the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drinke therout.

a. Par. 4. c

So they brought the golden vessel, that was takē out of the temple of the LORDS house at Jerusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubines dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and praysed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and ston.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde wth the kyng, right ouer agaynst the candelstick vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of y honde y wrote. Then chaunged the kyng his countenance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knes smote one agaynst the other. Wherefore the kyng cryed mightely, that they shulde brynge him the chalmers, Caldees and conuiners of deuels. The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanynge theroff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men: but they coude nether rede the wrytynge, ner shewe the kyng what it signified. The was the kyng sore afrayed, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore vexed. So by reason off this matter, y had happened to the kyng & his lordes, the quene went vp herself in to the bancket house, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O kyng God saue thy life for ever: Let not y thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in y kyngdome, that hath the spire off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstandinge and wysdome like the goddes. Meete the kyng Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chiefe of the soyth sayers, charmers, Caldees and deuilcomurers: because that such an abundant spire, knowlege & wisdom (to expound dreames, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kyng. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the prisoners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Jewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the spire of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstandinge, and that there hath bene greate wisdom founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and connyng charmurs, to rede this wrytynge, and to shewe me the meanynge theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, y thou canst expounde darcke thinges, and declare harde dowtes. Well than, yf thou canst rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be clothed wth purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

Daniel answered, and sayde before y kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue y rych gyses to another: yet not thelesse, I wil rede the wrytynge vnto y kyng, and shewe him the interpretacion therof. O kyng, God the hyest gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, y dignite of a kyng, wth worshippe & hono^r: so y all people, kynges & cinges stode in awe & feare of him, by reason off the hye estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. A gayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulnesse: he was deposed from his kyngly trone, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellynge was with the wyld Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hiest had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

E And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy selff aboue the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wyne therout: And hast praysed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, in whose honde consisteth thy breth ad all thy wayes: thou hast not loued him.

Act. 17. e

Therefore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token vp this wrytinge. And this is the scripture, that is wrytten vp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretacion off the thynge is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art founde to lichte: Phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to clothe Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. The very same night was Balthasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beyng 121. yere off age.

But Daniel exceeded all these prynces ad lordes, for the spire off God was plenteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherefore the prynces and lordes sought, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fauour vpon him. For why: he was so faythful, yf there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarrell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the prynces and lordes togeether vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: kyng Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

All the great estates off the realme: as yf prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are determed to put out a commaundement off yf kyng, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyret any petition, ether off any god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast into the Lyons denne. Wherefore, o kyng, confirmethou this statute, and make a wrytinge: that the thynge which the Medes and Perses haue ordened be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wrytyng, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wrytyng was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall toward Jerusalem stode open. Thereto he led he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his petition, and praysed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his petition, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kyng, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: O kyng, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyret his petition off any god or man, but only off thyself, o kyng: he shalbe cast into the denne off the Lyons? The kyng answered, ad sayde yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe off yf Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kyng: Daniel one of the presoners of Iuda (O kyng) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his petition thre tymes a daye. When the kyng herde these wordes, he was sore grieved, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to deliuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne nexte downe, to the intent that he myght saue him.

The prophet Daniel.

Dani. 14. c These men perceayngethe kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kyng) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kyng maketh, maye not be altered. Then the kyng bad them bryng Daniel, and they cast him into the Lyons denne.

D The kyng also spake vnto Daniel, ad sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kyng sealed with his owne rynge, and with y signet of his prynces: that the kynges commaundement concerninge Daniel, shulde not be breken.

So the kyng wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take enyslepe. But betymes in the morninge at the breate off the daye, the kyng arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto y denne, he cried w^t a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Rec y kyng spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruante off the lyuynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to deliuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kyng: O kyng, God saue thy lyfe for euer.

In the first yeare off Balthasar kynge off Babilon, sawe Daniel a dreame, and a vision was in his heade vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe of the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of y heauen siroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnlke another.

The first was as a Lyon, and yet had he Eagles wynges. I sawe, that his wynges were plucked from him, and he taken awaye from the earth: that he stode vpon his fete as a man, and that there was geuen him a mans herte. Iere. 4. a. b

Then I loked, & beholde, there was another like vnto a Leopard: this had wynges as a feule, euen foure vpon the backe. This beest had foure heades, ad there was power geuen him. After this I sawe in a vision by nyght, & beholde: the fourth beest was grymme and horrible, and marvelous stronge. It had greate yron teth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder fete. It was farre vnlke the other beestes that were before it: for it had ten hornes, wheroff I toke good hede. Esa. 6. 11. 1

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, & geuen ouer to be brient in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken away, but their lynes were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by night, and beholde: there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power & dignite regall, that all people, trybes and tinges shulde serue him. His power is an euerlastinge power, which shal neuer be put downe: & his kyngdome endureth vncorrupte. My herte was vered, & I Daniel had a troubled spiete within me, & the visions off my heade made me afrayed: till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these thinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstode the interpretaciō of these thinges.

These foure greates beestes, are foure kynges which shal aryse out of the earth. The first shal take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more & more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnlke the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teeth were of yron, and his nales off brasse: which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the resydue vnder his fete. I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touching the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face there fell downe thre: which home had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and looked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same home made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee & gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geue to the chiefe sayntes: and till the tyme, that y sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shalbe the fourth kyngdome vpon earth: it shalbe more then all other kyngdomes, it shal deuoure, treade downe & destroye all other londes.

Zach. 1. c The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shal aryse out of that kyngdome, after whose shere shal stonde vpon another, which shal be greater then the first.

He shal subdue thre kynges, and shal speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shal destroye the sayntes of the most hyest

The VIII. Chapter.

In the thirde yeare off the raigne of Kinge Balthasar, there appeared a visiō vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chiefe cite, which lyeth in the londes off Elam) and in y vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Olai.

Dan. 2. a

Then I looked vp, and sawe and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyest came vp last. I sawe that this ramme pushed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the ground.

This goate had a marvelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcelly vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very feare vpon him: yee he gaue him soch a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Neither had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to deliuer the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed excedinge greates, and when he was at the strongest, his greates horne was broken also. Then grewe there other foure soch like in the steade, toward the son-

re wyndes off the heauen. Yee out of one of the leest off these homes, there came vp yet another home, which waxed marvelous greate: towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the saye pleasant londe. It grewe vnto the heost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast seme downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prosper in all thinges, that it went aboute. Vpon this I herde en off the sayntes speakinge, which saynte sayde vnto one that asked this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhemination endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fete? And he answered him: Vnto the evenyng and the morninge, euen two thousande and thre hundred dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed agayne.

C Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the vnderstandinge of it, beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Olai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstande the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cominge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marche well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was speakinge vnto me, I waxed faynte, so that I suncke downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayinge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last tyme: for in the tyme appoynted it shall be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two homes, is the kynge off the Medes and Perses: but the goate is the kynge off Greke londe: the greate home that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the principall kynge. But whereas it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

D After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodnesse is a growinge) there shall aryse a kynge off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shall be mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboue measure, and all that he goeth aboute, shall prosper: he shall slay the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynesse, falsede shall prosper in his honde, his herte shall be proude, and many one shall be put to death in his welthyngesse. He shall stonde vpon agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shall be destroyed without honde. And this vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the evenyng and the morninge. Therfore wyrtethou vpon this sight, for it wyll be longe or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel very faynte, so that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but when I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busynesse, and marueled at the vision, neuertheless no man knewe of it.

The IX. Chapter.

In the first yeare off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, which was of the seide off the Medes, and was made kynge ouer the realme off the Caldees: Yee euen in the first yeare off his raigne, I Daniel desyred to knowe the yearly nombrie out of the booke, wherof the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet: that Jerusalem shulde lie waiste lxx. yeares: and I turned me vnto Ged the LORDE, for to praye and make myne intercessio, with fastinge, sackcloth and ashes. I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowleged, sayinge:

O LORDE, thou greate and fearfull God, thou that kepest coenaunt and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commanndementes: We haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe: yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and indgements.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure forefathers, and to all the people off the londe. O LORDE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertayneth nothyng but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto everyman off Juda, and to them that dwell at Jerusalem:

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye: thorow out all londes, wherein thou hast scrowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

The prophet Daniel.

YEE O LORD, vnto vs, to oure kinges & prynces, to oure forefathers: euen to vs all, that haue offended the, belongeth open shame. But vnto the O LORD our God, pertaineth mercy and forgiveness. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORD our God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes: yee all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not hearkened vnto thy voyce.

Wherefore the curse and oeth, that is written in the law of Moses the seruant of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wordes, which he spake agaynst vs, & agaynst our iudges that iudged vs: to bunge vpon vs such a greate plague, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Ierusalem. Yee all this plague, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORD our God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therefore hath y LORD made haist, to bringe this plague vpon vs: for the LORD our God is righteous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, O LORD our God, thou that with a mightie honde hast brought thy people out of Egypte, to get thy self a name, which remaineth this daye: we haue synned (O LORD) & done wickedly agaynst all thy righteousness: yet let thy wrathfull displeasure be turned awaye (I beseeke the) from thy cite Jerusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers: is Jerusalem and thy people abhoured, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therefore (O our God) heare the prayer of thy seruant, and his intercession: O let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waste.

O my God, encline thine eare, and herten (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated, yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name: For we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne righteousness, no: but only in thy greates mercies. O LORD, heare: O for geue LORD: O LORD confide, tary not ouer longe: but for thine owne sake do it, O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

D As I was yet speakinge at my prayers,

The x. Chap. Fo. lxxxij.

Knowleginge myne owne synnes and y synnes of my people, makinge so myne intercession before the LORD my God, for the holy hills sake of my God: yee whyle I was yet speakinge in my prayer, beholde, the man Gabriel (whom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute y offeringe tyme in the cuckyng. He informed me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde he) I am now come, to make the vnderstande it: For as soone as thou beganest to make thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therfore am I come to shewe the. And why? for thou art a man greatly beloued.

Wherefore, ponde the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstande the vision. Lxx. weekes are determed ouer thy people, & ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse maye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bunge in euerlastinge righteousness, to fulfill y visions and the prophetes, and to anoynte the most holy one. Vnderstande this then, and marcke it well: that from the tyme it shalbe concluded, to go and repayre Jerusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoynted) pryncer: there shalbe seuen weekes. Then shall the stretes & walles be buylded agayne lxxij. weekes, but with harde troublous tyme. After these lxxij. weekes, shal Christ be slayne, & they shal haue no pleasure in him. Then shal there come a people with the pryncer, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shal come as the water floude. But the desolacion shal continue till the ende of the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space of a week: and when the week is half gone, he shal put downe the slayne and meatoffringe. And in the temple there shalbe an abhominable desolacion, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, y this waistinge shal continue vnto the ende.

The X. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare of kinge Cyrus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a longe tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceived what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of thre weekes, so that I had no lust to eat bread: as for flesh and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anoynte my self, till the whole thre weekes were out.

The prophet Daniel.

Upon the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greate floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and looked: and beholde, a man clothed in lymynge, whose loynes were gyrded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Chusolite stone, his face (to lōke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and feete were like fayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like y^e voyce of a multitude.

I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greate fearfulness fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greate vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my colour cleane, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: & as soone as I herde it, fayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hand touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees & vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto y^e, & stōde right vp, for vnto y^e am I now sent.

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp trembling. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine hart to vnderstonde, and didest chaste thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou begannest to speake, had not the pryncce ouer the kingdome of the Perses wō stōde me xxi. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chiefe prynces, came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kynge of Persia, & am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to y^e grounde, and helde my tūge. Beholde, theretouched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lord, my ioyntes are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strength within me: How maye my lordes seruaunt then talke with my lord? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I cannot take my breth? Vpon this theretouched me agayne, one moch like a man, & comforted me, sayenge: O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recovered, & sayde: Spea

ke on my lord, for thou hast refreshed me. Thē sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto y^e? now wil I go agayne to fight with the pryncce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the pryncce of Grekelonde shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, y^e is fast noted in the scripture of treuth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael your pryncce.

The XI. Chapter.

And in the first yeare of Darins of Media, I stode by him, to conforte him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stōde vp yet thre kinges in Persia, but y^e fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chiefe power of his riches, he shal prouoke euery man agaynst the realme of Grekelonde. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kinge, that shal rule with greate dominion, and do what him list. And as soone as his kingdome commeth vp, it shalbe destroyed, & deuoyed toward y^e foure wyndes of the heauen. They y^e come after him, shal not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kingdome shalbe scatred, yee even amonge other thē those. And the kynge of y^e south shalbe mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself strōge, & shal rule his dominion wth greate power.

But after certayne yeares they shalbe ioynded together, & the kynges daughter of the south shal come to the kynge of the north, for to make frendshipe, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shal she be able to endure thorow his might: but she, & soch as brought her (yee & he y^e begat her, & comforted her for his tyme) shalbe deliuered vp. Out of y^e braunches of hir rote, there shal one stōde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges londe of the north, & handle him accordinge to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces, with their costly Jewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captynes in to Egypte, and he shal preuaile agaynst the kynge of the north certayne yeares. And when he is come into y^e kynges realme of y^e south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherfore his sommes shalbe displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greate hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterfloude: then shal he retorne, and go forth with defyenge and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

Thē the kynge of y^e south shalbe angrie, and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kinge of the north: yee he shal bringe a greete multitude of people together, and a greete heape shalbe geue into his honde: these shal he cary awaye wth greete pryde, for so moch as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shal not preuaile. For y^e kinge of y^e north shal gather (of the new) a greater heape of people then afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeares) with a mightie hoost & excedinge greete good.

C At the same tyme there shal many stonde vp agaynst the kinge of the south, so that y^e wicked children of chy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fail. So the kinge of the north shal come to laye sege, and to take the stronge fenced cities: And the power of the of y^e south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shal not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he cometh, he shal handle him as he list, & no man shalbe so hardy as to stonde agaynst him. He shal stonde in the pleasant countre, which thorow him shalbe destroyed. He shal set his face wth all his power to optayne his kingdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the daughters amōge women, to destroye him. But he shal faile, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shal he set his face vnto the Iles, & take many of the. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confusion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stumbe, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stonde in his place, & haue a pleasant kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & thas nether in wrath ner in batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holden worthy of a kinges dignite: this shal come in craftely, & optayne the kingdome with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

D So after y^e he hath taken truce with him, he shal haue disceat fully: that he maye get vp, & ouercome him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to y^e fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or graūdfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, y^e they had robbed & spoyled, yee & all their substaunce: ymagyngethoughtes agaynst the stronge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shalbe sterted vp wth a greete armie agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kin

ge of the south shalbe moued then vnto batell, with a greete & mightie hoost also. Neuerthelesse, he shal not be able to stonde, for they shal conspyre agaynst him. Yee they y^e eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shalbe mynded to do myschefe, & talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme apoynted. The shal he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greete good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shalbe busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme apoynted he shal come agayne, & go towarde the south: So shal it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne: y^e he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt.

He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strength, to put downe the daylie offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flatter with fayre wordes. But y^e people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. Those also that haue vnderstandinge amōge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shalbe persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captyuyte & with the carynge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shalbe set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstandynge shalbe persecuted also: y^e they maye betryed, purified & clysed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme apoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God. Yee he shal speake maruelous thinges agaynst the God of all goddes, wherein he shal prospere, so longe till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is deuysed alredy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shal be vpon womē: yee he shal not care for any God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipec the mightie Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honoure with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasant Jewels.

This shal he do, setinge helpe and succour at the mightie Idols and straunge god-

des. Soch as wil receaue him, and take him for God, he shal geue them greates worshipec and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shal come agaynst him with charettes, horsmen & with a greates navy of shippes. He shal come into the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entre also into the sayre pleasaunt londe. Many cities & countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab & the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shal stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, & the londe of Egipte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer & golde, & ouer all the precious Jewels of Egipte, Lybia and Ethiopia. Neuerthelesse the trydinges out of the east and the north shal trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye & curse a greates multitude. The rentes of his palace shal he pyech betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary, for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

The XII. Chapter.

In the tyme wil come also, that the greates pryncce Michael, which stondeth on chy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble, soch as neuer was, sens there betāne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal chy people be deliuered, yee all these that be folde writen in the booke. Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to euerlastynge life, some to perpetuall shame & reprose. The wyse (soch as haue taught o-ther) shal glister, as the shynynge of heauen: and those that haue instructed the multitude vnto godlyncesse, shal be as the starrs, worlde without ende.

And then o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, & seale the booke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and the shal knowlege increase. So I & amel leked, and beholde, there stode ether two: one vpon this shore of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And ene of the sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lymynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: how longe shal it be to the ende of these wonderous workes? Then herde I the man with the lymynge clothes, which stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: when he helde vp his righte and left honde vnto heauen, & swore by him which lyueth for ener: that it shal tary for a tyme, two tymes & half a tyme: & when the power of the holy people is clene scatred abroad, the shal all these thinges be fulfilled.

I herde it well, but I vnderstode it not. Then sayde I: O mylorde, what shal happen after that? He answered: Go thy waye Daniel, for these wordes shal be closed vp & sealed, till the last tyme: & many shal be purified, clensed & tried. But the vngodly shal lyue wickedly, and those wicked (as many of the as they be) shal haue no vnderstandinge. As for soch as haue vnderstandinge, they shal regarde it. And from y tyme forth that the daylie offerynge shal be put downe & the abhominable desolacion set vp, there shal be a thousand & two hundred & x. dayes. O well is him, that waiteth, & cometh to the thousande iij. C. & xxx. dayes. Go thou chy waye now, till it be ended: take thy rest, and byde in thy lot, till the dayes haue an ende.

The prophet Oseas.

This is the worde of the LORDE that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Bee ri, in the dayes of Osiass, Ioathan, Achaz & Ezechias Kinges of Iuda: and in the tyme of Jeroboam the sonne of Ioas kynge of Israel.

The first Chapter.

In the first, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childre by her: for the lorde hath committed greace whor done agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer yf daughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: call his name Iesrael, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Iesrael vpon the house of Iehu, and will lunge the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Iesrael.

She conceaued yet agayne, and bare a daughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Lomhama (that is, not opteyninge mercy) for I wil haue no pyte vpon the house of Israel, but forget them, and put them clene out of remembraunce. Nevertheless I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, & wil saue them, euen thow the LORDE their God. But I wil not deliuer them thow euen any bow, swerde, batel, horses or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Lomhama, she conceaued agayne, & bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Ami (that is to saye, not my people.) For why: ye are not my people, therfore will not I be yours. And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place where it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be yf childre of the luyng God. Then shall the children of Iuda and the childre of

The ij. Chap. Ho. lxxxiiiij.

Israel be gathered together agayne, & cho sethem selues one heade, and then departs out of the londe: for greace shall be the daye of Iesrael.

The II. Chapter.

All youre brechren, that they are my people: and youre susteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for youre mother, ye shall chide with her, and reprove her: for she is not my wife, nether am I hir husbode: vnlesse she put awaye hir whor done out of my sight, and hir aduouty from hir brestes. If no, I shall strype her naked, & set her, euen as she came in to yf worlde: Yee I shall laye hir waiste, and make her like a wil dernesse, and slaye her for chyrste. I shall haue no pyte also vpon hir children, for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to confusion. For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bried, my woll & my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shall not fynde hir focestoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: she shall seke them, but not fynde them. Then shall she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first husbode, for at yf tyme was I better at ease, then now. But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet gaue her come, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

Wherfore now will I go take my come & wyne agayne in their season, and set agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. And now will I dyscouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir leuers, and no man shall deliuer her out of my hondes. Moreover, I wil take awaye all hir myrth, hir holy dayes, hir new moones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I will destroye hir vynyardes and fyge trees, though she saith: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wylde beestes shall eate it vp: I wil punyssh her also for the dayes of Baal, wherin she censured him, decynging him with hir earynes and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saith the LORDE.

Wherfore beholde, I wil call her agayne, bringe her in to a wilbernes, and speake frend ly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyardes agayne, yee and the valley of Achor also, to shewe hir hope & comfote. Then shall she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, &

Iudic. 5.2
Exo. 15.2
E like as in the daye when she came out of the londe of Egypte. Then (saierh the LORDE)
she shal saye vnto me: O my housbande, z shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names any more. Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wylde bestes, with the foules of the ayre, z with euerythinge that cre-peth vpon the earth.

Esa. 3.2
Eze. 16.2
As for bowe, sixerde and batel, I will de-stroye soch out of the londe, z wil make them to slepe safely. Thus wil I marye the vnto my ne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I marye the, in righteuousnesse, in equitye, in louynge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also will I marye the vnto my self, z thou shalt knewe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto y heauens, saierh the LORDE: z the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe
the come, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Israel. I wil sorue them vpo earth, for a sede to myne owne self, z wil haue mercy vpon her, y was without mercy. And to the which were not my people, I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The III. Chapter.

Eze. 44.2
Esa. 18.2
Amos 6.2
2 Then sayde y LORDE come: Go yet y
waye z wowe an adnourerous wo-ma, whos chynghoure loueth, as y LORDE doth the childre of Israel: how be it they haue respecteto straunge goddes, and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. syluer linges, and for an hemer and an half of barleye, z sayde vnto her: Thou shalt byde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, z then wil I kepe my self for the.

2 Thus the childre of Israel shal syt a greate whyle without kinge and prynce, without offerynge and aulter, without prest and re-uelacion. But after warde shal the children of Israel conuerre, and seeke the LORDE their God, and Dauid their kinge: and in y latter dayes they shal worship the LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The IIII. Chapter.

Eze. 34.2
2 Are y woide of the LORDE, o ye children of Israel: For the LORDE must punysh the, y dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faithfulness, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lode: but swearynge, lyge, manslaughter, the fe-and aduontry haue gotten the ouerhande, z one bloudgiltynesse foloweth another. Therfore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and

The iiij. Chap.

all they that dwell therein, shal mourne. The bestes in the felde, the foules in y ayre, and the fishes in the see shall dye. Yet is there none, that wil chaste nor reprove another. The prestes which shulde reforme other me, are become like the people.

Therfore stonblest thou in y daye tyme z,
the prophet with the in the night. I wil brin-ge thy mother to sylence, z why? my people perish, because they haue no knowlege. Seinge then that thou hast refused vnderstandin-ge, therfore wil I refuse y also: so that thou shalt nomore be my prest. And for so moch as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childre. The more they increased in multitude, the more they synned agaynst me, therfore wil I charge their ho-noure in to shame. They cate vp the synnes of my people, z corage them in their wickednesse. Thus the prest is become like the people. Wherfore I will punysh them for their wicked wayes, z rewardethem acordinge to their owne ymaginacions. They shal cate, z not haue ynough: They haue vsed whor-dome, therfore shall they not prosper: z why?
they haue forsaken the LORDE, z not regarded him.

Whoridome, wyne and dyonfennesse take the herte awaye. My people are counsell at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. For an whorish mynde hath disceaned them, so y
they comitte fornicacion agaynst their God.
They make sacrifice vpon the hie mountaynes, z burnetheir incense vpon the hilles, yee amonge the okes, groues z busshes, for there are good shadowes. Therfore y^s dought-ters are become harlottes, and youre spouses
haue broke their wedlocke I wil not punysh
y^s doughters for beinge defyled, z y^s brydes that became whores: seinge the fathers themselves haue medled with harlottes, and offered with vnchrystes: but the people that wil not vnderstonde, must be punysht.

Though thou Israel art disposed to playe y harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Juda: thou shuldest not haue runne to Galgala, ner haue gone vpto Bethauē, ner haue sworn: the LORDE lyneth. For Israel is gone backe, like a waton come. The LORDE therfore shal make hir fede, as y labe y goeth astraye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. Their dionfennesse hath put the backe, z brought them to whoridome. Their rulers loue rewar-des, bryngre (saye they,) to their owne shame.
A wynde shall take holde of their fethers,
z they shal be cofounded in their offerings.

Are this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Israel: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punysshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spied net vnto the mount of Thabor. They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therewith: therefore wil I punyssh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Israel is not hyd frome: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Israel is defyled. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a moneth therfore shal deuoure them with their portions.

Blowe with the shaxmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethauen vpon the yonside of Beniamin. In the tymes of yf plage shal Ephraim be layed waiste, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Israel. Yet are the prynces of Iuda become like them, that remoue the londe-mynarkes, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them beslayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punysshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in loynge kyndnesse, and not in offerynge: see in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicfed doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murtherers & bloudthirstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. When I vndertake to make Israel whole, then the vngacionsnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robbynge. They cosidre not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute wth their owne ynuenciōs, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the princes, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduoutry, as it were an oven yf the baker heateth, whē he hath leste kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode dionden thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with such as disceauethē. Heb. 12 c

AUNE thenow (o Israel) vnto y LORD thy God, for thou hast taken a greate fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, & saye vnto him: O forgeue vs all oure synnes, receaue vs gracionsly, & then wil we offre y bullockes of oure lypes vnto the. Assur shalbe no more oure helper, neither wil we ryde vpon horses any more. As for the workes of oure hondes, we wil nemo recall vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

B (yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I lo uethem: so y my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the deue, and he shulde growe as y lylie, & his roote shulde breake out as Libanus. His brannches shulde spiede out abroad, & be as fayre as the olyuette, & smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, & growe vp as the corne, & floush as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with y: I dole any more. I wil graciously heare him, & lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene fyre tre, vpon me shalt thou fynde thy fructe. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstonde this: & he y is right enstructe, wil regarde it. For y wayes of the LORDE are rightuous, soch as be godly wil walke in them: As for the wicked, they wil stumbe therein.

de: yf euer there happened soch a thinge in youre dayes, or in y dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. Loke what the caterpillar hath lefte, y hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper lefte, chat hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath lefte, chat hath the blastinge consumed. Wake vp ye droncardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a mightie & an innumerable people shal come vp into my londe: these haue teth like the teth of Lyons, & chafte bones like the lyones. They shal make my vinyarde waiste, they shal pylle of the barckes of my fygetrees, stry pethem bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte.

B Make y mone as a virgin doth, y gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde grome. For the meate & drynt offerynge shalbe taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes y LORDES minsters shal mourne. The felde shalbe waisted, the londe shalbe in a miserable case: for the corne shalbe destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confusion, & the oyle vterly desolate. The husbōdemen & the wyne gardeners shal loke pitteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the haruest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grape gatherers shal make greate mone, when the vinyarde & fygetrees be so vterly waisted. Yee all the pomgarnettes, palm trees, aple trees, & the other trees of the felde shall wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men, shal come to confusion.

Gyde you, & make y mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the aulter: go youre waye in, & slepe in sack cloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meat & drynt offerynge shal be taken awaye from the house of y God. Proclame a fastyng, call the cōgregation, gather the elders & all the inhabitants of the londe together into the house of the LORDE y God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why? the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the Almighty. Shal not y meates be taken awaye before our eyes, the mynth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perishe in the ground, the garners shal lye waiste, the floozes shalbe broken downe, for the corne shalbe destroyed. O what a sighinge make the catell: the bullockes are very enel lifynge, because they haue no pastures

Blowe out y trompet in Sion, & crie vpo my holy hill, y all soch a dwel in the londe, maye tremble at it: for y daie of the LORDE cometh, & is harde at honde: a darcke daie, a gloomyng daie, a cloudy daie, yee & a stormy daie, like as the morninge spiedeth out vpo the hilles: Namely, a great & mightie people: soch as haue not benefites y begynnynge, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consumynge fyre, & behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very wast wildernesse, & there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to loke vpon like bayded horses, & runne like horsemen. They slyppe vp vpon y hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes: as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

The folke shal be afrayed of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal rine like giauntes, & kepe ouer the wallis like men of warre. Every mā in his goinge shal kepe his araie, & not go out of his path. There shal not one dryue another, but each shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, & not be hurte: They shal come into the cite, & runne vpon the wallis: They shal clymme vp vpon the houses, & slyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shal be moued: the Sonne & Moone shal be darkened, and the starres shal withdrewetheir shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greete, stronge & mightie to fulfill his commandment. This is y greete and maruelous fearfull daie of the LORDE: And who is able to abyde it?

Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you: & shute him out into a drye and wast londe, his face towarde the east see, and his hynder partes towarde the vttemost see. The stynte of him shal go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath dealte so proudly. Feare not (O londe) but be glad and reioyse, for the LORDE wil do greete thinges. Be not ye afrayed neither (O ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be greene, and the trees shal beare their frute: the fygetrees & vnyar des shal geue their increase.

Be glad then (O ye children of Sion) and reioyse in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of rightuousnes: & he it is y shal sende you downe showers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth: so that y garners shal be full of come, and the prestes plenteous in wyne and oyle. Woe take hede: In those dayes & at y^e same tyme, when I turne agayne the captyuite of Iuda & Jerusalem: I shal gather all people together, & brynge the in to the valley of Josaphat: and there wil I reason with the, because of my people & here- tage of Israel: who they haue scatred abou- te in the nacion, & parted my lode: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge me- haue they set in the bodel house, & solde the Damsels for wyne, y^e they might haue to dri- ke. Thou Tirus and Sidon and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye desyre me? well: yf ye will nedes desyre me, I shall recourence you, euen vpon youre heade, & y^e right shortly: for ye haue ta- ken awaye my syluer & golde, my fayre & good ly Jewels, & brought them in to youre gods houses. The children also of Iuda and Jeru- salem haue ye solde vnto the Grekes, that ye might brynge the farre fro y^e borders of thei- rowne countrees.

Beholde therfore: I will rayse them out of the place, where ye haue solde them, & will rewarde you euen vpon youre heade. Your- sonnes & youre daughters will I sell thorow the hondes of the childre of Iuda, & so they shal geue them forth to sell, vnto the of Sa- ba, a people of a farre countre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these thinges amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giauntes, let them drawe nye, let the come vp all the lusty warryours of the. Ma- ke you swordes of youre plowshares, and speares of youre sycles & syches. Let y^e wea- ke man saye: I am stronge. Instrue you, and come, all ye heithen rounde aboute: gather you together, there shal the LORDE laye all thy giauntes to the grounde. Let the people ary- se, and get them to the valley of Josaphat: for there wil I syt, and iudge all heithen roun- de aboute.

Laye to youre syches, for the harvest is ry- pe: come, get you done: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waken greate. In the valley appoynted, there shal be many, many people: for the daye of the LORDE is nye in y^e valley appoynted. The Sonne and Moone shal be darckened, & the starres shal withdrawe thei- light. The LORDE shal reare out of Sion, & crie out of Jerusalem, that the heauens & the earth shal quake withall. But the LORDE shal be a defence vnto his owne people, & a refuge for the childre of Israel. Thus shal ye knowe, y^e the LORDE youre God dwell vpon my holy mount of Sion. Then shal Jerusa- lem be holy, & there shal no straungers go tho- row her enymore. Then shal the mountaynes droppe swete wyne, & the hylles shal flowe with mylke. All the ryuers of Iuda shal ha- ue water ynough, & out of the LORDES hon- se, there shal flowe a sprynge, to water y^e bro- ke of Sion: but Egypte shal be layed waiste, & Edon shal be desolate: because they haue de- alce so cruelly with the childre of Iuda, and shed innocene bloude in their londe. The prophet Amos.

These are the sermons, that were shewed vnto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes at Thecua) vpon Israel, in the tyme of Othias kynge of Iuda, & in the tyme of Jeroboam y sonne of Ieas kynge of Israel, two yere before y earthquake And he sayde: The LORDE shal reare cut off Sion, & shewe his voyce fro Jerusalem: so that y pastures of the shepherdes shal be in a miserable case, & y toppes of Charniel dried vp.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre & feure wickednesses of Damascus, I will not spare her: because they haue troshed Galaad w yis slaes: But I wil sende a fyre in to y house of Hazael, the same shal consume the palaces of Benadab. Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, & rote out the inhabiter fro the felde of Auen, and him y holdeth the scepter, out of y pleasurable house: so y the people shal be dryuen out of sayre Siria. sayeth the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE: For thre & foure wickednesses of Gaza, I wil not spare her: because they make the prisoners yet more captyue, & haue dryuen th in to the lode of Edom. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to y walles of Gaza, which shal deuoure hir houses. I wil rote out th y dwell at Asdod & him y holdeth the scepter of Ascalon, and stretch out myne honde ouer Accaron, that the remnant of the Philistines shal perish saith the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off the cite off Tyre, I will not spare her: because they haue increased y captyue of the Edomites, and haue not remembered the brotherly couenunt. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to the walles off Tyre, that shal consume hir palaces. Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and feure wickednesses of Edom I wil not spare him, because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion all waye by him. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Theman, which shal deuoure the palaces of Dofra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and feure wickednesses of the children off Ammon, I will not spare them: because they crypte vp the womē greete with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder Therefore I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shal consume hir palaces: with a greete crie, in the daye of batell, in tem pest and in the daye off storme: so that their kynge shal gain to captyue, he and his pieces together, sayeth the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off Moab, I will not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kynge of Edom to ashes. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal consume y palaces of Cariath: so y Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawme. I will rote out the iudge from among them, and slaye all his prynces with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre and foure wickednesses of Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kepte his commaundementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceuid with the lyes, that theyir forefathers folowed. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shal consume the palaces of Jerusalem.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre & foure wickednesses of Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath solde the righteous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, & croke the wayes off the meke. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my holy name: they lye besyde euery altier vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyne of the oppressed. Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, that was as he as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the okes: not withstandinge I destroyed his frute fro aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egypte, and led you xl. yeres thore w the wyldernes, that ye might haue the Amoriters londe in possession. I raysed vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absieyners amonge youre yōge men. Is it not so, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE: But ye gaue the absieyners wyne to drynke, yee ye commaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Behelde, I wil crasse ye in sonder, like as a wayne crasseth, y is full of sheaves: so that y swifte shall not escape, nether the stronge be able to do eny thyng: no, the giaunte shal not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swifte off fote shall not escape. The horsman shal not saue his life, & he that is as maly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to turne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The III. Chapter.

Hear, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children of Israel) namely, vnto all y^e trybes, whō I brought out of Egipte, and sayde: Now only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therfore will I vyset you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together except they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelp out of his denne, excepte he haue gotten semthi^g? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpoⁿ y^e earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vp from the grounde, afore he catche semwhat? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afrayed? Commeth there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDEs doinge? Now doth the LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secretes before vnto his seruantes y^e prophetes. When a lyon roareth, who will not be afrayed? Seynge then that the LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophesy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egipte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greates murthur and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vpon robbery in their houses.

C Therfore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shall be troubled and beseged rounde aboute, thy strength shall be plucked from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdman taketh two legges or a peece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children of Israel (that dwell in Samaria, hauynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Damascus) shall be plucked awaye. Heare, and beare record in the house of Jacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes) that when I begynneto vyset the wickednesse of Israel, I will vyset y^e alters at Bethel also: so that the homes of the alter shall be broken of, & fall to the ground.

As for the wynter house and sonimer house, I will smyte them downe: and the houses of yuery, yee and many other houses shall perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The IIII. Chapter.

The iiij. Chap. Ho. lxxxix.

Hear this worde, o ye satyrne, that be vpon the hill of Samaria: ye that do poore men wronge, and oppresse the neddy: ye that saye to youre lordes: brynge byther, let vs drynke. Therfore the LORDE hath sworne by his holynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shall be lyste vp vpoⁿ speares, and youre posterite caried awaye in fysshers pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappes one after another, and in Armon shall ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngaciousnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. Ye broughte youre sacrifices in the mornyng, and youre cythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a thank offeringe off leuen, ye promised frewill offeringes, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therfore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities, & scarcenesse off bried in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

Whē there were but thre monethes vnto y^e haruest, I withelde the rayne from you: yee trayned vpoⁿ one cite, and not vpoⁿ another one peece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherfore two (yeethre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth y^e LORDE.

I haue smyten you with diouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: y^e cattirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amonge you, as I dyd in Egipte: youre yonge men haue I slayen wth y^e sward, and caused youre houses be taken captiue: I made the stynckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp into youre nostrils: yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

Some off you haue I ouerthrowen: as I ouerthrowe Sodome & Gomorre: so that ye were as a brande plucked out of the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therfore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Take the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornyng and the darcknesse, he treadeth vpoⁿ the hye places off the earth: y^e LORDE God of hoostes is his name.

A Hare this worde (o ye house of Israel) and why? I must make this mone for you: The vyrgin Israel shall fall, & neuer ryse vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shall helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth y^e LORDE God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shall be left scarce an C. therein: and where y^e re dwelt an C. there shall scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORDE vnto y^e house of Israel: Sete after me, and ye shall lyue, but sete not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and go not to Bersaba: for Galgal shall be caried awaye captiue, and Bethel shall come to naught. Sete the LORDE, y^e ye maye lyue: lest the house off Joseph be brent with fyre and consumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

Returne the lawe to womwod, and cast downe rightuousnes vnto the grounde. The LORDE maketh the vij. startes and the Dryons, he turneth the night into daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth y^e waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: the LORDE is his name. He rayseth destruccion vpon the mighty people, & bryngeth downe the stronge holde: but they owe him euell will, y^e re proueth them openly: and who so telleth the the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch the as ye oppresse y^e poore, and robbe him of his best sustenance: therefore, where as ye have buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruelos pleasaunt vynyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of the shall ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesse and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. Enemies are ye off the rightuous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therefore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tūge, so wicked a tyme is it.

Sete after the thinge that is good, & not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORDE God off hoostes shall be with you, accordinge to youre owne desyre. Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: & (no doute) the LORDE God of hoostes shall be mercifull vnto the remnaunt of Joseph. Off no (sayeth the LORDE God, the God of hoostes) there shall be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shall saye i every strete: alas, alas. They shall call the housbondeman to lamentaciō, and soch as can mourne, to mournyng. In all vynyardes there shall be heynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORDE. The vi. Chap.

LORDE: Wherfore wolde ye hane it? As for that daye of the LORDE, it shall be darcke and not cleare: Reelike as when a mā runneth fro a lyon, and a Beer meteth with him: or, whē he cometh into the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. Shall not the daye of the LORDE be darcke, and not cleare? shall it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, and where as ye cense me when ye come together I will not acceptee it. And though ye offere me brent offerings and meat offerings, yett haue I no pleasure therein: As for youre fat thank offerings, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and rightuousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, gaue ye me offerings and sacrifices those xl. yeares longe in the wyldernes? Yet haue ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymages of youre Idols. See and the starre of youre god Kempha, figures which ye made to worshipec them. Therefore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORDE, whose name is the God off hoostes.

And therfore, heare thou now the worde off the LORDE: Thou saiest: prophesy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothyng agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thy wife shalbe defyled in y cite, y sonnes and daughters shalbe slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shalbe measured out with the lyne: Thou thy self shalt dye in an vnclene londe, and Israel shalbe drynen out off his owne countre.

But vpon the mount Sion, there shall a remnaunt escape: these shalbe holy, and the house of Jacob shal possesse euen those, that had them selues afore in possessio. Moreover, the house of Jacob shalbe a fyre, the house of Joseph a flame, & the house of Esau shalbe the stearwe: which they shal kyndle and consume, so that nothinge shalbe left of the house of Esau, for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. They of the south shal haue the mount of Esau in possession: and loke what lieth vpon the grounde, that shal the philistynes haue: the playne scides shal Ephraim and Samaria possesse: and the mountaynes of Galaad shal Ben Jamin haue. And this hoost shalbe the childe of Israels prisioners: Now what so lieth from Canaan vnto Sarghad, and in Sepharad, that shalbe vnder the subiection of Jerusalem: and the cities of the south shall inheret it. shippe, they cast into the see, to lighten it off them. But Jonas gat him vnder y hatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

B So the master of the shippe came to him and sayde vnto him: why slombereſt thou?
Up, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil

Chap. VII. The summe off the thinges before sayde The litle flocke of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

This is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Michas the Morastite, in the dayes of Joathan, Achas and Ezechias kiges of Juda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Jerusalem.

Hear all ye people, marke this well o earth, and all that therein is: See the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen y^e LORDE from his holy temple. For why? behold, the LORDE shal go out of his place, & come downe, and treade vpon the hie thinges of the earth. The mountaynes shal consume vnder him, & the valleys shal cleue asunder: like as waxe consumeth at the fyre, & as y^e waters runne downwarde. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Jacob, and the synnes of the house of Israel.

But what is the wickednesse of Jacob? Is not Samaria? Which are the hie places of Juda? Is not Jerusalem? Therfore I shall make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast into the valley, & disconert hir foundations. All hir ymagines shal be broke downe & all hir wynnynge shal be brent in the fyre: yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an whore, & into an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherfore I wil mourne & make lamentacion, bare & naked will I go: I must mourne like y^e dragons, & take sorrow as y^e Estriches: for their wounde is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Juda, & hath touched y^e poore of my people at Jerusalem allreby. Wepe not, lest they at Geth perceauē it.

The prophet Michas.

E Then at Bethpharia, welter thyself in the dust and ashes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get thee hence with shame. The proude shall boast no more for very sorowe: & why? hir neighbour shall take from her what she hath. The rebellious cite hopeth, that it shall not be so euell: but for all that, the plague shall come from the LORDE, enen into the porte of Jerusalem. The greates noyse off the charrettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of y synne of y doughter of Sion, for in the came vp the wickednesses of Israel. Yee she sent hir counsers in to the lande of Geth.

The houses of lies will disceane the kyn- ges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Morassa) I shall brynge a posses- sion vpon the, ad the plague of Israel shall reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and sha- ue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shall be caried awaye captiue from the.

The II. Chapter.

A Vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, and deuise vnglacionsnesse vpon their beddes, to persourne it in y cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue lande, they take it by violence, they robbe men off their houses.

Thus they oppresse a mā for his house, & euery man for his heretage. Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, agaynst this housholde haue I deuysed a plague, wherout ye shall not plucke youre neckes: Ye shall no- more go so proudly, for it will be a perlon ty me. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mournynge shall be made ouer you on thys maner: We be utterly desolate, the por- cion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the lande, that he hath ta- ken from vs?

B Uerthelesse there shall be no man to de- uide the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. Tush, holde youre tunge (saye they) It shall not fall vpon this peo- ple, we shall not come so to confucion, sa- yeth the house off Jacob. Is the spere off the LORDE so clene awaye? or is he so myn- ded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therfore must I take par- te agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot out fro their good houses, and taken awaye my ex- cellent gistes from their children. Up, ges you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are cor- rupte, and shall miserably perish. Yff I were a fleshy felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they might syt bebbin- ge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I will gather the in dede (o Jacob) and dryue the remnaunt off Israel all toge- ther. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the catell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted of ohermen.

Who so breake the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go befo- re them, and the LORDE shall be vpon the heade of them.

The III. Chapter.

B Eare, o ye heades of the house of Ja- cob, and ye leders of the house of Is- rael: Shulde not ye knowe, what we- re laufull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euell: ye plucke of mens flyn- nes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eate the flesh of my people, ad flay of their flyn- ne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peces as it were in to a cauldron, ad as flesh into a pot. Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: be- cause that thoro their owne ymaginacions, they haue dealte so wickedly.

And as concernynge the prophetes that disceane my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shall be well: but yf a man put not somethinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

Therfore youre vision shall be turned to night, & youre prophycenge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer those pro- phetes, & the daye shall be darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, & yf sayth sayers confounded: yee they shall be say- ne (all the packe of the) to stoppe their mou- thes, for they haue not Gods worde. As for me, I am full of strength, & of y spere of y LORDE, full of iudgment & boldnesse: to ste- re the house of Jacob their wickednesse, & the house of Israel their synne.

The prophet Micheas.

O heare this ye rulers of the house of Jacob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lausfull, and waiste asyde the thinge that is straight: Ye that buylde vp Sion with bloude, and Jerusalem with doynge wronge. O ye iudges, ye geue sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophecy for money. Yet wil they be take as these that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORD amonge vs? Tush, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therfore shal Sion (for yonrefakes) be plowed like a felde: Jerusalem shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of y temple shal be turned to an hye wodde.

The III. Chapter.

In the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that the hill off the LORDES house shalbe set vp hyer the enymou taines or hilles: And the people shal preese vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shal haue them thither, sayenge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORD, & to the house of the God of Jacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

For the lawe shall come out off Sion, and the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the heithen, and resourme the people off farre countrees: so that of their swerdes they shal make plowshares, and sythes off their speares.

When people shall not lift vp a swerde agaynst another, yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but every man shal sit vnder his vineyarde and vnder his fyge tie, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off y LORD of heostes hath spoken it. Therfore, where as all people haue walked every man in y name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God forever and ever. At the same tyme (sayeth the LORD) will I gather vp the lame and the outcastes, and soch as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of y outcastes a greace people: and the LORD himself shal be their kynge vpon the mount Sion, fro this tyme forth forevermore. And vnto the (O thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the daughter Sion) vnto the shal it come: eue the first lordshipe and kyngdome of the daughter Jerusalem. Why the art thou now so heuy? is there no kynge in the? are thy councelers awaye that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauayle?

The v. Chap. Ho. xciiij.

And now (O thou daughter Sion) be sorry, let it greue the as a wise labourge with childe: for now must thou get the out off the cite, and dwell vpon the playne felde: And vnto Babilon shalt thou go, there shalt thou be deliuered, and there the LORD shal lowsethe from the honde off thine enemies.

Now also are there many people gathered together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Sion is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knowe not the thoughtes off the LORD, they vnderstonde not his counsell, that shal gather them together as the sheeues in the barne. Therfore get the vp (O thou daughter Sion) and thros she out the corner: For I wil make thy home yron, and thy clawes brasse, that thou mayest grynde many people: their goodes shalt thou appropriate vnto the LORD, and their substance vnto the ruler off the whole worlde.

The V. Chapter.

Ister that shalt thou be robbed thy self, O thou robbers daughter: they shal laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheeke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, art little amonge the thousandes off Juda. Out off the shal come one vnto me, which shal be y governoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnynge, and from everlastinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shal beare) haue borne: then shal the remnant of his brethren be conuerted vnto y children of Israel. He shal stonde fast, and geue fode in the strength of the LORD, and in the victory of the name of y LORD his God: and when they be conuerted, he shal be magnified vnto the farthest partes of the worlde.

Then shal there be peace, so that the Assirian maye come in to oure londe, and treade in oure houses. We shal brynge vp seven shepherdes and viij. prynces vpo them: these shal subdue the londe of Assur w the swerde, and the londe of Tyrod with their naked weapons. Thus shal he deliuer vs from the Assiria, when he cometh within oure lande, and setteth his fore within oure borders. And the remnant of Jacob shal be amonge the multitude of people, as the dew of the LORD, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for noman, and waiceth of no body. And the residue of Jacob shal be amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the beestes of y wodde, and as the lyons whelp amonge a flocke of shepe: which (when he goeth thorow) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thyne honde shal be lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

C The tyme shal come also (sayeth the LORDE) that I wil take thine horses from the, & destroye thy charettes. I will breake downe the cities off thy londe, and cutteth oute all thy strong holdes. All witchcraftes will I rote out of thine hande, there shall no more soothsayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thine ymages will I destroye out of y so that thou shalt nomore bowe thy self vnto the workes of thine owne hondes. Thy greues wil I plucke vp by the rotes, & breake downe thy cities. Thus will I be auenged also, vpon all heithen that will not heare.

The VI Chapter.

A Ertken now what the LORDE sayeth: Up, reprocethe mountaynes, and let the hilles heare thy voyce. O heare the punysshment of the LORDE, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundaciōs of y earth: for the LORDE wil reprocen his people, and reason with y Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the, or wherem haue I hurte the? geue me answere. Because I broughte the fro the londe of Egypte, and delyuered the out of the house of bondage? Because I made Moyses, Aaron and Miriam to lede the? Remember (o my people) what Balach the kynge of Moab had ymaged agaynst the, and what answere that Balaam the sonne of Beor gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: y ye maye knowe the louynge kyndnes of y LORDE.

B What acceptaile thyng shal I offre vnto the LORDE? shall I bowe my knee to the hye God? Shall I come before him wth burnt offeringes, and with calues of a yere olde? Hath the LORDE a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames of oyle? Or shal I geue my firstborne for myne of fences, and the frute of my body for the synne of my soule? I wil shewe the (O mā) what is good, and what the LORDE requyrrh off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: that thou mayest be called a cite of the LORDE, & that thy name maye be rightuousnesse. Heare (o ye trybes) who wolde els geue you soch warnynge? Shulde I not be displeased, for the vnrightrous good in the houses of the wicked, and because the measure is minished? Or shulde I iustifie

the false balauces and the bagge of disceat full weigthes, amongethose that be full off riches vnrightrously gotten: wherethe citsyns deale with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceat full tungen in their mouthes?

Therefore I will take in honde to punyssh the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, & not haue ynough: yett thou shalt bunge thy self downe. Thou shalt sie, but not escape: and those y thou woldest saue, wil I delyuer to the siverde. Thou shalt seme, but not reape: thou shalt presse out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, to anoynte thy self withall: thou shalt treade out swete must, but shalt drynke no wyne. Kepe the ordinaunces of Amri, & all the customes of the house of Achab: ye fellowetheir pleasures, therfore wil I make the wast, & cause y inhabitants to be abhorred, O my people: & thus shalt thou beare thine owne shame.

The VII. Chapter.

W is me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleanynge in the harvest. There are no mo grapes to eate, yet wolde I sayne (with all my herte, haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpon earth, there is not one righteous amōge mē. They laboure all to shed bloude, & euery mā hunteth his brother to deatch: yett they saye they do well, when they do cuell. As the pynce wil, so sayeth the iudge: y he maye do him a pleasure agayne. The greates mā speaketh what his herte desyret, & y hearers alowe him. The best off the is but as a thysle, and the most righteous of them is but as a breere in the hedge. But when the daye of thy preadix to cōmmech, y then shalt be vyfited: the shal they be waisted awaye. Let no man beleue his frende, ner put his confidēce in a prince. Repet he porte of thy mouth, from her y lieth in thy bosome: for y sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the doughter shal ryse agaynst her methet, y denghter in lawe agaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans fees shal keuen they of his owne householde.

Nevertheless I wil lcke vp vnto y LORDE, I wil patiently abythe God my sauoure: my God shal heare me. O then enemie of myne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shol get vp agayne: and though I sit in darknesse, yet y LORDE is my light. I will beare the punysshment of the LORDE (for why, I haue offended him) till he sit in iudgment vpon my cause, and se that I haue right. He wil bangeme forth to the light, and I shal se his rightousnesse.

Myne eyes shal beholde her, when she shal be troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. The tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lawe shal go abroad: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the stronge cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

Amos 9. c Not wth standinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therein, and for the frutes of their owne ymaginations. Therfore fede thy people with thy redde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Chamel, Basan & Galad as aforetyme. Maruelous thinges will I shewethem, like as when they came out of Egipte. This shal the heithen se, and be ashyamed for all their power: so that they shal laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. They shal lick the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, & tremble in their holes. They shal be afayed of the LORDE oure God, & they shal feare y.

The i. Chap. Ho. xciiij.

The first Chapter.

Deu 5. b Ro. 2. a Exo 14. a Iere. 10. b Eia. 34. a Abac. 1. a Soph. 1. b The LORDE is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeaunce: yee a taker of vengeaunce is y LORDE, and wroth full. The LORDE takech vengeaunce of his enemies, and reserveth displeasure for his aduersaries. The LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leauech no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE geeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fece. When he reproveth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Chamel and the pleasure of Libanus waisteth awaye. The mountaynes tremble for h. m, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quakech: yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therein. Who maye endure before his wiath? Or who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? His anger takech on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

Bul gracious is the LORDE, and a stronge holde in tyme of treuble, he knoweth the that put their trust in him: when the flende renneth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies. What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this maner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come no more trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the diuicefardes be consumed together, even when they be full. There come out of y soch as ymagin myschefe, and geue vngacious counsell agaynst the LORDE.

Therfore thus saierh the LORDE: Let the be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil vexe the, but not utterly destroye the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORDE hath geuen a commaundement concernyng the, that there shal come no more sede of thy name. The carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

The II. Chapter.

B Holde, vpon the mountaynes come the fece of him, that bryngeth good tydings, & preachech peace. O Juda, kepe thy holy dayes, perfourme thy promyses: for Belial shal come no more in the, he is utterly rote out.

Qqq iij

The prophet Naum.

The scaterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Jacob, like as y glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken them downe, & marred the wyne braunches. The shyld of his giauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charrettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forward, his archers are wel deckt & trimmed. The charrettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cressettes of fyre, and go swysly, as the lighetenynge.

B When he doth but warne his giauntes, they fall in their aray, & haistely they clymme vpon the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shal fall. The quene hir self shal be led awaye captiue, and hir gentiwomen shal mourne as the doves, & grone within their hertes. Ninue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stonde, (shal they crye) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shal be a multitude of all maner costly ornaments. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & clene striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees treble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyds, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes? where the lyon and the lyoness wente with the whelpes, and no man stayed them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyoness: he fylled his denues with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauysished. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saith the LORDE of hostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charrettes, that they shal smoke with all, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoylinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaungers shal nemoire be herde.

The III. Chapter.

A To that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, & wil not leaue off from rauysishinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, russhinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the horses, & the rollinge of the charrettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisterynge speares: There lyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of deed bodies: There is no ende of deed coarses, yee men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beutifull harlot: which is a mastresse of wydcraft, yee and selleth the people to her whir whordome, and the naciens thowen hir witchcraft.

Beholde, I wil vpon the (saith the LORDE of hostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy heade: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyte vpon y, to make the be abhorred, and a gasynge stocke: yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Ninue is destroyed.

Who wil haue pyte vpon the? where shal I seke one to confoite the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexandria: that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see? Ethiopia and Egipte were hir strenght, & that exceedinge greate aboue measure. Aphyca and Lybia were hir helpers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuite: hir yonge children were smytten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most awncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be drongen, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees w rype fyges: which when a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

Beholde, thy people with in the are but women: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure y barres. Drawe water now agaynst the: be beseged, make vp thy stronge holdes, go into the claye, temple the mortar, make stronge bricke: yet the fyre shal consume the, the swerde shal destroye the, yee as y locuste doth, so shal it eat the vp. It shal fall heuily vpon the as the locustes, yee right heuily shal it fall vpon the, euen as the gresshoppers. Thy marchauntes haue bene mothen the startes of heauē: but now shal they spiede abroad as the locustes, and fle their waye: Thy lordes are as the gresshoppers, & thy captaynes as the multitude of gresshoppers: which when they be colde, remaine in y hedges: but when the Sonne is vp, they fla awaye, and no mā can tell where they are become. Thy shepherdes are aslepe (o kinge of Assur) thy worthies are layed downe: y people is scatted abroad vpon the mountaynes,

The first Chapter.

This is the heuy burthē, which the prophet Abacuc byd se. O LORDE, how longe shal I crie, & thou wilt not heare? How longe shal I complayne vnto the, suffrynge wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why lettest thou me se weerynesse and labour? Tyranny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is tome in peces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the rightrous: this is the cause, yf wronge iudgment procedeth. Beholde amouge the heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abashed: for I wil do a thinge in youre tyme, which though it be tolde you, ye shal not beleue.

For lo, I wil rase vp yf Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwelling places, that be not their owne. A grymme & boystous people is it, these shal sit in iudgment & punyshe. Their houses are swifter then the catter of the mountayne, & bytter forer then yf wolues in yf euenynge. Their horsmen come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastely to deuot as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them cometh an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shal mocke the kintes, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh courage vnto them, to go forth & to do more euell, & so as crybe that power vnto their God.

The ij. Chap. Ho. xcij.

But thou O LORDE my God, my holy one, thou art from the begynnyng, therfore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordered them for a punysment, and set them to reprove the mightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde yf thinge that is wicked. Wherfore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the creeping beesies, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therfore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thowrow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so pleteous. Wherfore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer cease to slaye the people.

The II. Chapter.

I stood vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answer I shulde geue him yf reproveth me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so cometh by, maye rede it: for yf visio is yet farre of for a tyme, but at yf last it shal come to passe, & not fayle. And though hetary, yet wait thou for him, for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not prosper: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. Like as the wyne disceaueth the dyonckarde, even so the proude shal fayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as unsatiabie as death. All heithen gathereth he to him, & heapech vnto him all people.

But shall not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapech vpon other mens goodes? How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, yf shal bytethe, & awake, that shal teare yf in peces: yee thou shalt be their pray. Seinge thou hast spoyled many heithen, therfore shall the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therein.

The first Chapter.

In the eight moneth of the secōde yere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, sayenge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. Turne you vnto me (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saith the LORDE of hoostes. Be not ye like youre forefathers, vnto whom the prophetes cried a feie tyme, sayēge: Thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: Turne you from youre euell wayes, & from youre wicked ymaginations. But they wolde not heare, ner regard me, saith the LORDE. What is now become of youre forefathers and the prophetes? are they yet still alyue? But dyd not my wordes & statutes (which I cōmaunded by my seruantes & prophetes) touch yor forefathers? Vpon this, they gaue answer & sayde: like as y LORDE of hoostes deuysed to do vnto vs, acordinge to oʷr owne wayes & ymaginations, even so hath he dealt with vs.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the x. moneth (which is the moneth Sebat) in the secōde yere of Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo the prophete, sayenge: I sawe by night, and lo, there sat one vpon a reade horse, and stode still amonge the Myrtetrees, that were beneth vpon the grounde: and behynde him were there reade, speckled and whyte horses.

Then sayde I: O my LORDE, what are these? And the angel that talked with me, sayde vnto me: I will shewe the what these be. And the man that stode amonge the Myrtrees, answered & sayde: These are they, whom the LORDE hath sent to go thorow the worlde. And they answered the angel of the LORDE, that stode amonge the Myrtrees, and sayde: We haue gone thorow the worlde: and beholde, all the worlde dwelle at ease, and are carelesse.

Then the LORDES angel gaue answer and sayde: O LORDE of hoostes, how longe wilt thou be vnmmercifull to Ierusalem and to the cities of Iuda, with whom thou hast bene displeased now these lxx. yeares? So the LORDE gaue a louynge and a comfortable answer, vnto the angel that talked with me. And the angel that commoned with me, sayde vnto me: Crie thou, and speake, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I am excedynge gelous ouer Ierusalem and Sion, and sore displeased at the carelesse heithen: for where as I was but a litle angrie, they dyd their best that I might destroye them. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: I wil turne me agayne in mercy towarde Ierusalem, so that my house shalbe buy'ded in it, saith the LORDE of hoostes: yee and the plommer shal be layed abroad in Ierusalem, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

Crie also, and speake: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: My cities shall be in good prosperite agayne, the LORDE shall yet confort Sion, and chose Ierusalem. Then lift I vp myne eyes and sawe, and beholde, foure hornes. And I sayde vnto the angel, that talked with me: what be these? he answered me: These are y^e hornes, which haue scattered Iuda, Irael and Ierusalem abroad. And y^e LORDE shewed me iij. carpenters. Then sayde I: what wil these do? he answered, & sayde: These are the hornes, which haue so strowed Iuda abroad, that no man durst lift vp his heade: But these are come to fraye them awaye, and to cast out y^e hornes of the Gentiles, which lift vp their horne ouer the londe of Iuda, to scatter it abroad.

The II. Chapter.

Lift vp myne eyes agayne, & loke: and beholde, a man with a measure lyne in his honde. Then saide I: whe ther goest thou? And he sayde vnto me: To measure Ierusalem, that I maye se how longe and how brode it is. And beholde, the angel that talked wth me, wente his waye forth. Then were there out another angel to mete him, & sayde vnto him: Kynne, speake to this yongeman, & saye: Ierusalem shal be inhabited without eny wal, for y^e very multitude of people & catell, y^e shal be therein. Yee I myself (saith the LORDE) wil be vnto her a wall of fyre rounde aboute, & wil be honoured in her.

O get you forth, O fle from the londe of y^e north (saith the LORDE) ye, whom I haue scattered in to the foure wyndes vnder heauē, saith the LORDE. Saue thy self, o Sion: thou that dwellest with y^e dongheer of Babilon, for thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: With a glorious power hath he sent me out to the heithen, which spoyled you: for who so toucheth you, shal touche the apple of his owne eye. Beholde, I will lift vp myne honde ouer them: so that they shal be spoyled of those, which afore serued them: & ye shal knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me.

Be glad, & reioyce, o dongheer of Sion: for lo, I am come to dwell in the myddest of the, saith the LORDE. At the same tyme there shal many heithen cleue to the LORDE, & shal be my people. Thus wil I dwell in the myddest of the, & thou shalt knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto the. The LORDE shall haue Iuda in possession for his parte in the holy grounde, & shal chose Ierusalem yet agayne. Let all flesh be still before the LORDE, for he is rysen out of his holy place.

The III. Chapter.

When he shewed me Iesua y^e hye prest, standinge before the angel of the LORDE, and Satan stode at his right honde to resiste him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Satan: The LORDE reproceth the (thou Satan) yee the LORDE that hath chosen Ierusalem, reproceth the. Is not this a brande take out of the fyre? Now Iesua was clothed in vnclene rayment, and stode before the angel: which answered & sayde vnto those, y^e stode before him: take awaye y^e foule clothes from him. And vnto him he sayde: Beholde, I haue take awaye thy synne from the, & wil decke the with chaunge of rayment. he sayde mouer: set a sayre myter vpon his heade. So they set a sayre myter vpon his heade, & put on clothes vpon him, and the angel of y^e LORDE stode there. Then the angel of the LORDE testified vnto Iesua, & spake, thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: If thou wilt walke in my wayes, & kepe my watch: thou shalt rule my house, & kepe my courtes, & I wil geue the place amonge these that stonde here. Heare o Iesua thou hye prest, thou & thy frendes that dwell before the, for they are woderous

And y^e angel that talked with me, came agayne, & waked me vp (as a man that is raysed out of his slepe) & sayde vnto me: What seist thou? And I sayde: I haue looked, and beholde: a candellsticke all of golde, with a boll vpon it & his viij. lampes therein, & vpon euery lampe viij. stalkes: And ij. olyue trees therby, one vpon the right syde of the boll, & the other vpon the left syde. So I answered, & spake to the angel y^e talked with me, sayenge: O my lord what are these? The angel that talked with me, answered & sayde vnto me: Knowest thou not what these be? And I sayde: No, my lord. He answered, & sayde vnto me: This is the worde of the LORDE vnto Zorobabel, sayenge: Whether thorow an hoost of men, ner thorow strenght, but thorow my sperte, saith y^e LORDE of hoostes. What art thou (thou greete mountayne) before Zorobabel? thou must be made eauen. And he shal bringe vp the first stone, so that men shal crie vnto him: good lucke, good lucke.

B Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: The bondes of Zorobabel haue layed y^e foundation of this house, his bondes also shal fynishe it: that ye maye knowe, he w^{ch} that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. For he that hath ben despyssed a litle season, shal reioyce, whē he seyth the tynne weight in Zorobabels honde. The viij. eyes are the LORDES, which go thorow the hole worlde. Then answered I, & sayde vnto him: What are these two olyue trees vpon the right and left syde of the candellsticke? I spake morouer, & sayde vnto h. m. what be these ij. olyue braunches which thorow y^e two golden pipes) emptye themselves into the golde? He answered me, & sayde: Knowest thou not, what these be? And I sayde: No, my lord. Then sayde he: These are the two olyue braunches, that stonde before the ruler of the whole earth.

Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, y^e goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theues shalbe iudged after this booke, & all swearers shalbe iudged acordinge to the same. I wil bringe it forth (saith the LORDE of hoostes) so y^e it shal come to the house of the thefe, & to the house of him, that falsely sweareth by my name: & shal remayne in his house, & consume it, with the tymbre & stones therof. The the angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes & se, what this is y^e goeth forth. And I sayde: what is it? He answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde morouer: Euen thus are they (y^e dwell vpon the whole earth) to lye vpon. And beholde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynnesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & thence y^e lempe of leade vp in to an hole.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & looked: & beholde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a stork) & they l. ft vp the measure betwixt the earth & the heauen. Then spake I to the angel, y^e talked wth me: whyther wil these beare the measure? And he sayde vnto me: into the lande of Sy near, to buylde them an house: which when it is prepared, the measure shal be set there in his place.

The VI. Chapter.

And I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & looked: & beholde, there came iij. charettes out frō betwixt two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: In the first charret were reade horse, In the seconde charret were blacke horse, In y^e thirde charret were whyte horse, In y^e fourth charret were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lord, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: These are the iij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stēde beset the ruler of all y^e earth. That with the blacke horse wente into the lande of the north, & the whyte folowid thē, and the sprekled horses wente south towarde the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their iourney ouer the whole earth. And he sayde: get you hence, and go thorow the worlde. So they wēte thorow eue the worlde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go towarde y^e north, shal fill my wrath in the north countre.

The VII. Chapter.

It happened also in the fourth yeare of kyng Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Caslew: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before y^e LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the prestes, which were in the house of the LORDE of hoostes, and to the prophetes: Shalde I wepe in the fyfte moneth, and absteyne, as I haue done now certayne yeares? Then came the worde of the LORDE of hoostes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the prestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned in the v^t vii. moneth (now this lxx. yeares) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eat and drinke for youre owne selues? Are not these the wordes, which the LORDE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Jerusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt men, both toward the south and in the playne countrees?

Nevertheless I wil now intreate the residue of this people nemore, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but they shal be a sede of peace. The vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the grounde shal geue hir increase, and the heauens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnaunt of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the heithen (O ye house of Juda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I deliuer you, that ye shal be a blessing: feare not, but let youre h's be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: like as I denyed to punyssh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wraich (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determied now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Juda and Jerusalem, therfore feare ye not. Now the thinges that ye shal do, are these: Speake euery man the treuth vnto his neighbour, execute iudgment truly and peaceably within youre portes, none of you ymagyne well in his hert agaynst his neighbour, and loue no false ooties: for all these are the thinges that I hate, saith the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: There shall yet come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: Up, let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, let vs see the LORDE of hoostes, I wil go with you. Xee moch people and mightie heithen shal come and see the LORDE of hoostes at Jerusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power in to the see, and she shal be consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be afrayed. Gaza shal be very sory, so shal Accaron also, because hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shal perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwel.

Straingers shall dwel at Asdod, & as for y pryde of y Philistynes, I shal rote it out. Their bloude will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominacions from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for oure God, yet they shal be as a prynce in Juda, & Accaron like as Jebusi. And so will I compass my house reunde aboute with my men of warre, goinge to and fro: that no oppres- soure come vpon them eny more. For that haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Turne you now to the stronge holde, yet that be in prison, & longe fore to be deliuered: And this daye I bringe the worde, that I wil rewarde the duble agayne. The X. Chapter.

A W Rayeth the LORDE then by tymes to geue you the latter rayne, so shall the LORDE make cloudes, and geue you rayne ynough for all the increace off the felde: for rayne is the answer of Jools. The soychsayers se lyes, and tell but vayne dreames: the comfort that they geue, is nothyng worth. Therefore go they astraye like a flocke of shepe, and are troubled, because they have no shepherde. My wrochfull displeasure is moved at the shepherdes, and I will vyseth the goates. For the LORDE of hoostes wil graciously vyseth his flocke (the house of Juda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horse in the batell. Out of Juda shal come the helmer, the hale, the bare bowe, and all the princes together. They shalbe as the giauntes, which in the batell treade downe the myre vpon yf stretes. They shal fight, for yf LORDE shalbe with them, so that the horsmen shalbe confounded.

B I wil cōforte the house of Juda, and preserve the house of Joseph. I wil turne them also, for I pyrie them: and they shal be like as they were, when I had not cast them of. For I the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim shalbe as a giaunt, and their herte shalbe cherefull as thowrow wyne: see their children shal se it, and be glad; and their herte shal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them & gather them together, for I wil redeme them. They shall increace, as they increased afore. I wil so we the amonge the people, yf they maye thinke vpon me in farre countrees: they shal lyue wth their childre, and turne agayne. I wil bringe them agayne also from the londe of Egipte, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them in to yf londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal wante nothyng. He shall go vpon the see of trouble, and smyte the see warres: so yf all the depe floudes shalbe dried vp. The proude boostinge of Assur shalbe cast downe, and the scepter off Egipte shal be taken awaye. I will comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saith the LORDE.

O Penthydores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye fyre trees, for the Cedre is faulz, yee all yf proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye oke trees of Baajan) for yf mighty stronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Men maye heare the Lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Jordane is waisted awaye.

Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: I see the shepe of yf slaughter, which shalbe slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no synne, but they yf sell the, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: see their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I no more spare those that dwell in the londe (sayeth the LORDE) but lo, I will deliuer the people, every man in to his neighbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kynge: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their bondes wil not I deliuer them.

I myself fedde yf slaughter shepe (a poore flocke verely) and toke vnto me two staves: the one I called louynge mekenesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. The shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye wth them, neither had they any delyte in me. Then sayde I: I will fede you no more, the thynge that dyeth, let it dye, and that wil perishe, let it perishe, & let the remaunt eate, every one the flesh of his neighbour. I toke also my louynge meke staff, and brake it, that I mighte disanull the conuenant, which I made with all people, And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yff ye thynke it good, bringe hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. syluer pens, yf value that I was prysed at. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. syluers pens, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I mighte loose the brotherheade betwixte Juda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I will raise vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seeke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for such as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shall not nourish the thing that is whole: but he shall eat the flesh off such as be fat, and teare their clawes in peeces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaveth the flocke. The swerde shall come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shall be clenched vp, and his right eye shall be sore blinded.

The XII. Chapter.

The heavy burthen which y^e LORD
DE hath deuysed for I^s.

Zhus saith the LORD E, which spread the heauens abroad, layde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man y^e breach of life: Beholde, I will make Jerusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people y^e are rounde aboute her: Yee Iuda himself also shall be in the sege agaynst Jerusalem. At the same tyme will I make Jerusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all such as lift it vp, shall be toarne and rete, and all the people of the earth shall be gathered together agaynst it.

In that daye (sayeth y^e LORD E) I will make all horses abashed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, and smyte all the horses of the people with blindnesse. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabitants off Jerusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORD E off hoostes their God. In that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hore burnynge ouen with woodd, and like a cresset off fyre amonge the strawe: so that they shall consume all the people rounde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the lefte. Jerusalem also shall be inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Jerusalem stondeth.

The LORD E shall preserve the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the citesyns of Jerusalem, shall be but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORD E defende the citesyns of Jerusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shall be as Dauid: and the house of Dauid shall be like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORD E before them.

At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all such people as come agaynst Jerusalem. Morouer, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the citesyns off Jerusalem, will I

pour out the sprete of grace and prayer: so that they shall loke vpon me, whom they haue pearfed: and they shall bewepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne: Yee and be sory for him, as men are sory for their first childe.

Then shall there be a greates mournynge at Jerusalem, like as the lamentacion at Adramon in the felde off Maggadon. And the londe shall bewayle, every kynred by themselves: The kynred off the house of Dauid themselves alone, and their wyues by themselves: The kynred off the house of Iatthan themselves alone, and their wyues by themselves: The kynred off the house of Levi themselves alone, and their wyues by themselves: The kynred off the house of Semei themselves alone, and their wyues by themselves: In like maner, all the other generacions, everychone by themselves alone, and their wyues by themselves.

The XIII. Chapter.

In that tyme shall the house off Dauid and the citesyns off Jerusalem haue an open well, to wash off synne and vncleennesse. And then (sayeth the LORD E off hoostes) I will destroye the names of Idols out off the londe: so that they shall no more be put in remembraunce.

As for the false prophetes also and the vncleane sprete, I shall take them out off the londe: So that yf eny off them prophesy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: Thou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORD E: Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophesyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, every one off his vision when he prophesieth: nether shall they weare sacke clothes eny more, to disceauene me with all. But he shall be fayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbende man, for so am I taught by Adam from my youth vp. And yf it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? he shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

Arise (othow swearde) vpon my shepherde, and vpon the prynce of my people, sayeth the LORD E off hoostes: Smyte the shepherde and the shepe shall be scatred abroad, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. And it shall come to passe (sayeth the LORD E) that in all the londe two partes shall be roted out, but the thirde parte shal remayne therein. And the same thirde parte wil I brynge thorow the fyre, and will clense them, as the syluer is clenſed: yee and trye them, like as golde is tryed.

Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will ſaye: it is my people. And they ſhal ſaye: LORDE, my God.

The XIII. Chapter.

BEholde, the daye of the LORDE cometh, that thou ſhalt be ſpoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the heithen, to fight agaynſt Jeruſalem: ſo that the cite ſhal be wonne, the houſes ſpoyled, and the women deſyled. The half of the cite ſhal go awaye into captiuite, and the reſidue of the people ſhal not be caried out of the cite.

After that ſhall the LORDE go forth to fight agaynſt thoſe heithen, as men uſe to fight in the daye of battell. The ſhall his fete ſtode vpon the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the eaſt ſyde of Jeruſale. And y^e mountolyuete ſhal cleue in two, eaſtwarde, & weſtwarde ſo y^e there ſhal be a greate valley: & the halff mounſhal remoue towarde the north, and the other halff towarde the ſouth.

And ye ſhall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hylles ſhal reach vnto Aſal. Yee ſle ſhall ye, like as yeſled for the earthquake in the dayes off Oſias kynge of Iuda. And the LORDE my God ſhal come, and all ſanctes with him. In that daye ſhal it not be light, but colde and froſt. This ſhal be that ſpecyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the euenynge tyme it ſhal be light. In that tyme ſhall there waters of liſe runne out from Jeruſalem: the half parte of them towarde the eaſt ſee, and the other half towarde the vttermoſt ſee, and ſhall continue both ſomer and wynter. And the LORDE himſelf ſhal be kynge over all the earth.

At that tyme ſhal there be one LORDE only, and his name ſhal be but one Men ſhal go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibeā to Remmon, and from y^e ſouth to Jeruſalem. She ſhal be ſee vp, and inhabited in hir place: from Ben Iaminis porte, vnto the place of the firſt porte, and vnto y^e comer porte: and from the tower of Chananel, vnto the kynges wyne preſſes. There ſhall men dwell, and there ſhal be no more curſynge, but Jeruſalem ſhal be ſafely inhabited.

This ſhal be the plage, wherewith y^e LORDE wil ſmyte all people, that haue fought agaynſt Jeruſalem: namely, their fleſh ſhall conſume awaye, though they ſtonde vpon their fete: their eyes ſhall corruppe in their holes, and their tunge ſhal conſume in their mouth.

In that daye ſhall the LORDE make a greate ſedicion amonge them, ſo that one mā ſhal take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neighbour. Iuda ſhal fight alſo agaynſt Jeruſalem, and the goodes of all the heithen ſhal be gathered together rounde aboute: golde and ſyluer and a very greate multitude off clothes. And ſo ſhal this plage go ouer horſes, miles camels, aſſes and all the beaſtes that ſhall be in the hoofte, like as yonder plage was.

Euery one that remayneth then of all y^e people, which came agaynſt Jeruſalem, ſhal go vp yearly, to worſhip the kynge (euen y^e LORDE of hooftes) and to kepe the feaſt off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Jeruſalem, ſo to worſhip the kynge (euen the LORDE of hooftes) vpon the ſame ſhal come no rayne. Off the kynred of Egypce go not vp & come not, it ſhall not rayne vpon them nether.

This ſhal be the plage wherewith y^e LORDE wil ſmyte all heithen, that come not vp to kepe the feaſt of tabernacles: yee this ſhal be the ſynneplage of Egypce and the ſynneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feaſt of tabernacles.

At that tyme ſhal the rydinge geer of y^e horſes be holy vnto the LORDE, and the kettels in the LORDES houſe ſhal be like the baſens before the altar: yee all the kettels in Jeruſalem and Iuda, ſhal be holy vnto the LORDE of hooftes: and all they that ſlaye offeringes, ſhall come and take of them, and dight them therein. And at that tyme there ſhal be no mo Cananites in the houſe of the LORDE.

What Malachy conteyneth.

Chap. I. The benefites of God, shewed specially vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punysment of the vnthankfulnesse, vnfayth-fulnesse and covetousnesse of the prestes and the people.

Chap. II. He threatneth punysment and confucion vnto the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III. Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Of the abrogacion of the olde leuiticall prest-heade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearfull daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LOR
DE sheweth agaynst Israel
by Malachy.

Have I loued you, sayeth y LOR
DE: ad yet ye saye: wherein hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Jacobs trecher, sayeth the

LORDE: yet haue I loued Jacob, and hated Esau: Yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wylterneffe for dragons. And though Edem saye:
de: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde
vp agayne the places that he waisted: yet (sayeth y LORDE of hoostes) what they buyl-ded, that brake I downe: so that it was called a cursedlonde, and a people, whom the LORDE hath ever bene angrie withall.

Your eyes haue sene it, ad ye youre selues must confesse, that y LORDE hath broughte thelonde of Israel to greate honoure. Shul-de not a sonne honoure his father, and a ser-uaunt his master? If I be now a father, where is myne honoure? If I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Now to you prestes, that despise my name. And yf ye saye: wherein haue we despised thy name? In this, that ye offre vncle-nebied vps myne altier. And yf ye wil saye:
wherin haue we offred eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the altier of the LORDE is not to be regarded. If ye offre yf blynde, is not y euell? And yf ye offre the lame and sicke, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy pryncce, shal he be content with the,
or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes?

The ij. Chap.

And now make youre prayer before God,
that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for soch thinges haue ye done. Shal he regarde you-re personnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so moch as to shut y doores, or to kyndle y fyre vps myne altier for naught? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: and as for the meat offeringe, I wil not accepte it at youre honde. For from the rysinge vp of y some vnto y goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the Gentiles: Yee in every place shal there sacrifice be done, and a clene meat offeringe offred vp vnto my name: for my name is greate amonge the heithen, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye sa-ye, the altier of y LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thyng that is set therupon, not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but labour and tra-uayle, and thus haue ye thought some at it, (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) offeringe robbery, yee the lame and the sicke. Ye haue brought me in a meat offeringe, shulde
I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LOR-DE? Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he ma-keth a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kynge (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearfull amonge the heithen.

The II. Chapter.

And now (o ye prestes) this commandment toucheth you: yf ye will not heare it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) I wil sende a curse vpon yen, & will curse youre blessings: yee curse them will I yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal corrupte youre seide, and cast donge in youre sa-ces: euen the denge of youre solempne feastes and it shal clene fast vpon you. And ye shall knowe, that I haue sent this commandement vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Leni, might stonde, sayeth y LOR-DE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace wth
him: this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me, ad had my name in reuerence. The lawe of trench was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace ad equitye, and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the Now hath Juda offended: yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Ierusalem, for Juda hath defyled the Sanctuary of the LORDE, which he loued, and hath kepte the daughter of a straunge God. But the LORDE shal destroye the man that doth this (ye both the priest & the scholar) out off the tabernacle of Jacob, with him that offereth vp meat offeringe vnto the LORDE off hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the altar of the LORDE is covered with teares wepyng and mournynge: so that I wil no more regarde the meat offeringe, neither wil I receaue or accepte any thinge at youre hands.

And yet ye saye: wherfore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte y^e and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despysed her: yet is she thyne owne companion and married wife.

of hoostes. But who maye abyde the daye of his commynge? Who shalbe able to endure, when he appeareth? For he is like a goldsmithes fyre, ad like wasshers sope. He shall tryt him downe to trye and to clense y^e syluer, he shal purge the children of Levi, and purifie them like as golde and syluer: that they maye brynge meat offeringes vnto the LORDE in righteousness. Then shall the offeringes of Juda and Ierusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge & in the yeares afore tyme. I wil come & punyssh you, & I myself wil be a swift wyne agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduouters, agaynst false swearers: yee ad agaynst those, that wrogeously kepe backe the hyrclynges dewty: which were the wyddowes & the fatherlesse, & oppresse the stranger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. The translatoure vnto the reader.

These booke (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not indged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayest perceaue by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manifest trueth in the other booke of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: Yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circumstance in all thinges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntuly & peruersly aledged. Trench it is: A mans face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether can it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These & many other darck places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myrre with blynde and curvions opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of y symple, that as longe as they be not conferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as curvionsnes expoundeth them. But who so ever thou be that readeest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, commytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the spiete of God (which is the auther therof) shal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findest net herin) y prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes senge in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readeest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodorios translatiō. Neuertheles, both because of these y be weake and scrupulous, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thankes geuinge: I haue not lefte them out: to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasiō to geue thankes vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

4 Re. 25. 6

And Josias helde the feast of Easter in Jerusalem vnto the LORDE, and slewe y^e Passouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth. He set y^e prestes also in ordre (acordinge to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmetes in the temple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Levites the holy ministers of Israel, that they shulde haue lowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arke of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomō the sonne of Dauid had buylded and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon y^e shulders. Now serue y^e LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre villagies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordeined, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: See loke y^e ye all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordunge and distribucion of the pryncipall mē which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childre of Israel. Byll y^e Passouer, & prepare offeringes for y^e brethien, and do acordinge to the commaundement of y^e LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto y^e people y^e was soude, Josias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, & thre thousande oxē. These the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, acordinge as he had promysed: & to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe & an hundred oxē. Moreover Jehonias & Semeias and Nathanael brethien, & Hasabias, Jehiel and Josabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundred bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Levites stode goodly in their ordre, and had the vnlenned bred thorow out y^e trybes. And after the ordunge of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses, & so they roasted the Easter-lambe as acordinge was. As for the thāt offeringes & the other, they dight thē in kettels & pottes, & sett them before the people wth good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fatt, vntill the tyme was expyred, but the Levites prepared for them selues & for their brethien the childre of Aaron. The syngers also y^e children of Asaph, stode in their ordre, acordinge as Dauid had deuysed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary & Jedithū, which were appoynted by the kynge. Moreover the porters & doorekeepers stode by the dores & y^e diligently, so y^e none wente out of his stondinge & seruyce: for their brethien (the Levites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges persourmed, that belonged to the offryng of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passouer, & offred thanke offeringes besyde y^e sacrifice of y^e LORDE, acordinge to y^e cōmaundement of kynge Josias.

So the children of Israel which were thē present helde an honorable Passeouer, & the feast of swete bred viij. dayes lōge. See soch a Passouer was not kepte in Israel, from y^e tyme of the prophet Samuel. And all the kynges of Israel helde not soch an Easter, as this which kynge Josias helde, & y^e prestes, y^e levites, y^e Jewes & all Israel, of all thē y^e were at Jerusalem. In y^e xvij. yeare of y^e raigne of Josias was this Passeouer kepte. And wth a perfecte hert dyd kynge Josias ordre all his workes (before y^e LORDE) & y^e thinges y^e were wrytten of hī in tymes past, cōcernynge those y^e synned & were vngodly agaynst y^e LORDE before all people, & y^e sought not the worde of y^e LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of kynge Josias, Pharaō y^e kynge of Egypte wēt vp, & came towarde Carcamis by Euphrates, & Josias wēt to mete hī. Then sente the kynge of Egypte vnto Josias, sayenge: what haue I to do wth y^e, o kynge of Juda? I am not sent of y^e LORDE to fight agaynst y^e, for my warre is vpo Euphrates, gochon y^e waye home agayne in all y^e haist. And Josias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vnderooke to fight agaynst him, & herke ned not vnto þe worde of þe prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in þe felde of Mageddo. And the prynces preassed to kynge Josias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruauntes: Carry me awaye out of the battayll, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruauntes toke him awaye out of the front of the battayll. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charett, came to Jerusale, dyed, & was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Jewry they mourned for Josias, yee the rulers also wth their wyues made lamentacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done ever still in Israel.

These thinges are written in the boke of of the stones of þe kynges of Juda: namely, all the actes & workes of kynge Josias, his kyngly power & maiesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, & what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wrytten in the boke of the kynges of Israel & Juda. And þe people toke Jechonias the sonne of Josias, & made him kynge in þe steade of Josias his father, whan he was xxiij. yere olde. And he raigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kynge of Egypte put him downe, þe he shuide not raigne in Jerusale, & rayssed vp a tarynge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer & one taler of golde. The kynge of Egypte also made Joachim his brother kynge of Juda & Jerusale. As for the of the kynges counsell wth the kynge himself and Zaraceles his brother, he toke the, & caried the awaye prisoners in to Egypte. Yve & twentie yere olde was Joachim, whan he was made kynge in the londe of Juda and Jerusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. After this, Nabuchodonosor þe kynge of Babylō came vp, bounde him wth bandes of yren, & caried him vnto Babylō. Nabuchodonosor also toke all þe vessell þe were halowed in the temple of the LORDE, & all þe Jewels, & caried the vnto Babylō, & brought the in to his owne temple at Babylō. Of his vnclemes & vngodlynes, it is wrytten in þe boke of the actes of þe kynges. And Joachim his sonne raigned in his steade: He was made kynge beinge xviij. yere olde, & raigned but thre monethes & x. dayes in Jerusale, & dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yere, Nabuchodonosor sent & caused him be brought vnto Babylō wth þe holy vessels of þe LORDE, & made Sedechias his brother kynge of Juda and Jerusale, whan he was xxi. yere olde: and he raigned xj. yere.

The ij. Chap.

And he dyd euell also in þe sight of þe LORDE, & cared not for þe wordes þe were spōken vnto hi by þe prophet Jeremy at þe mouth of the LORDE. And where as he had made an ooth vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor, he manstrowe himself, & fell fro him hauynge a stiff neck & hert, & trasgressed all þe statutes & ordinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also & heades of þe people of the LORDE dyd moch euell, & became vngodly, more the the thethen, beyngedefyled in all maner of abhominacions: Yee & defyled þe holy temple of the LORDE at Jerusale. And the God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto the, to turne them backe & to call the agayne fro their synnes: for he wolde sayne haue spared the for his holy tabernacles sake. Neuertheles, they had his messaungers in derision: & loke what God spake vnto the by his prophetes, they made but a spoite of it. This diew on so longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth wth his people for their vngodlynes, & tyll he caused the kynges of þe Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men wth the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy temple, & spared no body, necher yonge ner olde, necher mayden ner yongeman: but they were all deliuered in to the power of the kynges of þe Caldees, & all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, & caried them vnto Babylō. As for the house of the LORDE, they breke it, & brake downe the walles of Jerusale, set fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they caried vnto Babylō.

Thus became they þe prisoners & bōde mē of þe kynge of Babylō, tyll they were deliuered & raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he premysed them by the mouth of the prophet Jeremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest: namely, all the tyme þe it laye wayest, had it rest & quyetes lxxij. yeres.

The II. Chapter.

When whā kynge Cyrus raigned ouer the Persians, & whā the LORDE wolde persecutethe worde þe he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Jeremy: the LORDE rayssed vp the spire of Cyrus, the kynge of the Persians, so þe he caused this wrytinge to be proclaimed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kynge of þe Persians: The LORDE of Israel that hye LORDE hath made me kynge of the lōde, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Jerusalem in Jewry. your people, yf LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Jerusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute y place, shal helpe the, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought to a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem.

Then the pryncipall men out of the trybes and vyllages of Juda and Ben Jamin stode vp: so dyd the prestes also & the leuites (whom the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem. And they that were aboute them, helped them with all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vp thereto. A kynge Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornamentes, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon had caried awaye from Jerusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and deliuered them to Michudatus his treasurer, and by him they were deliuered to Salmanasar y debyte in Jewry. And this was the nombre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Jerusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerxes the kynge of Persia, these men: Balemus and Michudatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius y scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria & in other places vnder y dominion therof, Wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerxes, wherein they complayned vnto the kynge of them in Jewry and Jerusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

C Syr, thy seruantes Rathimus the story wyter, Sabellius the Scribe, & other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to o lord the kyn that the Jewes which are come vp fro you vnto vs into the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the temple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be sett vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vtterly agaynst the kynge. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scome of it, but to shewe it vnto o lord the kynge, & to certifie him therof: to the intent y yf it plea se the kynge, he maye cause it be sought in the booke of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch war nyng wrytten, and shalt vnderstande, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Jewes which dwell therein, haue ever bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherefore now we certifie oure lord the kynge, that yf this cite be buylde and occupied agayne, & the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the story wyter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius y scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are disobedient, and haue caused much warre, & that mightie kynges haue raigned in Jerusalem, which also haue raysted vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherefore, I haue commaunded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they proceede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathimus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kynge Artaxerxes, they gat them together, and came in all the haist to Jerusalem with an hoost of hoisemen, and with much people of fote, and forbade them to buylde. And so they left off from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the seconde yeare of kynge Darius.

The III. Chapter.

Dynge Darius made a greatesse feast vnto his seruantes, vnto all his courte, & to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes & rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundred & xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yongemen, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commoned amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let euery one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kynge Darius geue greatesse giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and couerings: he shall make him a cosily charett & a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde & principall nexte vnto kynge Darius, & that because of his wysdome, and shalbe called yf kynges kynsman.

B So every one wrote his meaninge, sealed it and layed it vnder the kynges pelowc, and sayde: whan the kynge aryseth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whosē worde the kynge and his chiefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shal haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thynge. The secōde wrote: The kynge is stronger. The thirde wrote: women haue yet more strength, but aboue all thynges yf truely teacheth awaye the victory. Now whan the kynge was rysen vp, they toke their wrytinges and deliuered them vnto him, and se he red them. Then sent he forth to call all his chiefe lordes, all the debytres & rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the counsell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for yf yonge mē, yf they might declare their meanynges theselues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, yf kynge sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thynges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) & sayde: O ye men, wyne is marvelous stronge, and ouercōmeth them yf drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, & bryngeth both the poore man & yf kynge to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also wth the bondman and with the fre, with the poore & ryche: it taketh awaye their vnderstōdinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth any heuynes, dett or deuotie: It causeth a man to thinke also that yf thynge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kynge, nor yf he is in auctorite, & yf he ought not to do soch thynges. Moreover, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulness & loue: but as soone as they are dronckē, they drawe out the swerde & wil fight: & whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, & so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Judge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thynges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tounge.

The iij. Chap.

The iij. Chapter.

Then the seconde (which had sayde, yf the kynge was stronger) beganne to speake, sayēge: O ye men, are not they the strongest & most excellent, yf cōquere the lōde & the see, & all yf is in yf see & in the earth? Now is the kynge lorde of all these thynges, & hath dominion of the all: & loke what he cōmaūderh, it is done. If he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles & towres. They are slayne, & slaye (other men) them selues, & ouer passe not yf kynges worde. If they get the victory, they brynge the kynge all the spoyle. Likewise, the other yf medle not wth warres & fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge ttrybutte vnto yf kynge. And yf yf kynge alone do but cōmaūde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaūde to forgiue, they forgiue: yf he cōmaūde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he cōmaūde to buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaūde to plante, they plāte. The cōmon people & yf rulers are obedient vnto him. And yf kynge in the meane season syttech hī downe, eattech and dryncketh, & taketh his rest: the kēpe they watch roūde aboute yf kynge, & not one of the darre gett him out of yf waye, to do his owne busynes, but must be obediēt vnto yf kynge at a worde. Judge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tounge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of women & of yf truely) beganne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not yf greate kynge, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine yf excelleth: Who is it the, yf hath yf lordshipe ouer the? Haue not women borne the kynge, & all yf people yf rule these thynges? Haue not women borne the, & brought the vp, yf plante the vynes, wherout yf wyne cōmeth? They make garmentes for all mē, they geue honō vnto all men, & wthout women can not men lyue. If they gather golde & syluer & all precious thynges, & se a fayre & wel fauoured womā, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes enely vnto the woman, & gape vpon her, & haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer & golde, or eny maner of precious thynge. A mā leaueh his father yf brought him vp, he leaueh his owne naturall cōūtre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner countre. By this then ye must nedes knowe, yf women haue yf domynion ouer you.

Doth it grene yon? A mā taketh his swergoeth in the darcknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaued & robbed, he bungeth it in better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes & become bondmen for their wyues sakes: many one also haue perished, & haue bene slayne, &

haue synned because of women.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, & all lōdes fōd
de in awe of him, & no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se, y Apame (y daughter of the greate kynge Darcacus) the kynges cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpo the right hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Mor-ouer, the kynge looked vpo her w open mouth:
yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also:
but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, & to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

Eccles 1. 2
O ye men, are not women then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that doth these thinges. Then the kynge & the prynces looked one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trouth: O ye men, are not women stronger? Greate is the earth, hye is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compasseth the heauen rounde about, and fetcheth his course againe to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trouth, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth vpon the trouth, the heauen prayseth it, all workes shak and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, women are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vn-righteous, yee all their workes are vnrighteous, and there is no trouth in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. As for y trouth, it endureth, and is allwaye stronger: it lyueth, and cōquereth for euermore woulde without ende.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all
y people cried & sayde: Greate is the trouth, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Are what thou wilt, more then is ap-poynted in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy com-panyons: thou shalt syt nexte me, and bemy kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge:
Remembre thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye whan thou camest to the kyngdome) to buyl-de vp Jerusalem, and to sende againe all the vessels and Jewels, that weretaken awaye out of Jerusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne. And thy munde was to buyl-de vp the temple, which the Edomites brek, whan Jerusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is y maiesty, which, I desyre

Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kys-sed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all y lordes and nobles,
y they shulde conueye him forth, & all them
y wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all y shreues y were in Celosyria & Phenices, & vnto Libanus, y they shulda harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Jerusalem, to buylde y cite withall. Morouer he wrote vnto all y Jewes that were gone out of his realme in to Jewry because of the fredome, y no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulda
come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes shul-de geue over the cities and vyllagies of the Jewes, which they had taken in: yee & that they shulde yearly geue xx. talentes to y buyldinge of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge

Ecclesi 1.2

He gaue ouer also all the vessell þe Cyrus had separated from Babilon: ⁊ all þe Cyrus had geue in comaundement, y same charged he also, þat it shulde be done, ⁊ sent vnto Jerusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Jerusalem, ⁊ prayesd y Kinge of heauē, ⁊ sayde: Of y cometh victory, of the cometh wysdome ⁊ clearnesse, ⁊ I am thy seruant. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wysdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of oure fathers.

And so he toke the letters, ⁊ wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethre þe were at Babilon, ⁊ they prayesd y God of their fathers, y he had geue them refreshinge ⁊ lyberte to go vp, ⁊ to buylde Jerusalem ⁊ the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes ⁊ gladnesse, seven dayes longe.

The V. Chapter.

After this, were the prynciall mē of all þe vyllagies chosen in the trybes ⁊ kinreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wiues and children, with their seruantes and maydens, with all their catell ⁊ substance. And Darius the kynge sent with them a thousande hoysmen, to conueye them safely vnto Jerusalem: and their brethre were glad, playenge vpon instrumentes, and synge.

And these are the names of them, which wente vp out of the vyllagies acordinge to the trybes. Of the prestes, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Aaron: Jesus the sonne of Josedece, Joachim the sonne of Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel (of the kynred of Dauid, out of the kynred of Phares, of the trybe of Juda) which spake wonderfull thinges vnder Darius the kynge of Persia, in y seconde yeare of his raigne in the first moneth of Nisan.

These also are they of Jewry, which came vp and turned agayne vnto Jerusalem, out of the captiuyte that Nabuchodonosor y kynge of Babilon had brought vnto Babilon. And every man sought his porcion agayne in Jewry, his cite, they that came to Zorobabel, and with Jesus, Nehemias, Saraias, Raelaias, Elimeus, Emmanius, Marbochens, Beelsers, Mechpsa, Rochoz, Olorus, Emonias, one of their prynces.

And so dwelt the prestes & the Leuites, & the people & wente out to Jerusalem & in the countre there aboute, the syngers also & the porters, every one of Israel in his owne lande.

So when the seuenth moneth came, and when the childre of Israel were every man at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the court, which was before & east doore. And there stode Jesua the sonne of Josedec and his brethien & prestes, & Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethien, settinge vp an altier, to offere brient sacrifices vpon it, as it is written in & lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other countre es, and the heithen out of all londes set vp the altier in his place, and offred sacrifices & brientofferynges vnto the LORD in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe. And daylie offred they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offeringes also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. And all they that vowed offerynges vnto the LORD, beganne at the new Moone of & seuerth moneth to offere vnto God, for the temple of the LORD was not yet buylde. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpenters, money, meate & drynke with chearfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue carres, & they shulde cary Cedie trees from Libanus to be iastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the haven of Joppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kynge of the Persians.

And in the seconde yeare they came in to the temple of God at Jerusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, and Jesua the sonne of Josedec, and their brethien the prestes and Leuites, and all they that were come vnto Jerusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, & layed the foundation of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yeare & they were come in to Jery and Jerusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were about xx. yeare olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORD: so Jesua and his sonnes and his brethien all the Leuites stode together, and perfourmed the lawe & ordinaunce in the house of the LORD.

The iij. booke of Esdras.

And the prestes stode and had their garments & trompettes, & the Levites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng thankes, and prayes vnto the LORD, accordinge as Dauid the kynge of Israel had ordeyned. And the songe that they dyd synge vnto the LORD, was after this maner: O synge vnto the LORD, for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for euer. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and synge with loude voyce, praysynge the LORD together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORD. There came also from amonge the prestes and Levites the rulers and elders, accordinge to the trybes and kynreds (soch as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many also with trompettes and greate ioye: In so much, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpon the trompettes.

Then came the enemies of the trybes of Juda and Ben Jamin, to knowe what that troppetynge and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued yf it was they which were come agayne out of captiuite, & wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORD God of Israel. So they wente to Zorobabel and Jesua and to the rulers of the villages, & sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde with you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORD, & we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Asbazar the kynge of Assiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Jesua and the rulers of the villages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of oure God with vs: we oure selues alone wil buylde vnto the LORD, like as Cyrus the kynge of the Persians hath commaunded vs.

But the heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Jewry, helde vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpon them pruely, stopped soch as brought eny thinge to them, forbad them to buylde, & hyndered those that made the passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be fynished: & this continued so longe as kynge Cyrus lyued: & so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yere, vntill yf raigne of kynge Darius.

the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and Jesua the sonne of Josedec stode vp, and beganne to buylde the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, when the prophetes of the LORD helped them.

At the same tyme came Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companyons, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden & commaunded you to buylde the house? to make the rofe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the workemen, that buylde them? Nevertheless the elders of the Jewes had soch grace of the LORD, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked thereto) but buylde on still, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answer receaued from him. The letter that these men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

Sysennes the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, and the landlordes with their companyons, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutacion vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Jewry, & wente to Jerusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greate house of God and the temple, with greate costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greate haist with the worke, & helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greate diligence & worship is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had commaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to yf inter that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those yf were yf rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this answer: we are the seruautes of the LORD, which made heauen and earth: & as for this house, it hath bene buylde and set vp afore tyme by the greate and mightie kynge of Israel. But when oure fathers prouoked God vnto wraich, & synned agaynst the God of Israel, he gaue the ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe yf house and brent it, and caried awaye the people prisoners vnto Babilon.

Nevertheless, in the first yere that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon, Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde vp this house agayne: and all the ornamentes that Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Jerusalem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and delyuered them to Zorobabel ⁊ to Salmanasar the vndershene, commaunding them, ⁊ they shulde brynge those same ornaments agayne to Jerusalem into y^e temple, ⁊ to begynne from y^e tyme forth, to buylde the temple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundation of y^e LORDES house at Jerusalem, and ever sence have they buylde, ⁊ yet is it not ended. And therefore (O Kyng) yf thou thynkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries ⁊ rolles of Kyng Cyrus: yf it be founde the, that it is done wth the counsell and cōsent of Kyng Cyrus, and yf oure lorde y^e Kyng be so mynded, let him wyte vnto vs therof.

D Then cōmaunded kyng Darius, to seeke in the Lybraries: and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first yere of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kyng Cyrus cōmaunded, y^e the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem shulde be buylde agayne (⁊ odoures to be made there continually vnto the LORDE) whose heyth shalbe ten cubites, y^e bredth ix. cubites ⁊ iij. square wth thre hewen stones, wth a losfe of tymbre of the same countre, yee wth a new losfe, ⁊ the expenses therof to be geuen of y^e house of kyng Cyrus. And the ornaments of golde ⁊ syluer, y^e Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Jerusalem, where they were afore. Sysennes also the vndershene in Syria and Phenices, y^e prynces and their companyons, and the other y^e be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

E Cyrus haue cōmaunded also, that they shal buylde the house of the LORDE whole vp: ⁊ haue ordeyned them, to helpe those y^e be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: ⁊ out of the trybute and tarynge that is yearly raysed vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be delyuered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oren, rammes, lambes, ⁊ come, salt, wyne and oyle, and that continually every yere: after the expences which the prestes that be at Jerusalem, shew to be made daylie: this shalbe geuen vnto them without delaye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hiest God, for the kyng and for his seruantes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclaimed also on every syde, that who so ever breaketh or despyseth this cōmaundement of y^e Kyng, shalbe hanged vpon a gallow (made of his owne good) ⁊ all his goodes shalbe seasoned vnto y^e Kyng. The LORDE therfore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all y^e Kynges and people, that undertake by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncurteously wth the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem. ⁊ Darius the kyng haue ordeyned, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

The VII. Chapter.

Then Sysennes y^e vndershene in Celosyua and Phenices, and the other landloides with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kyng Darius had ordered, were diligent in the holy workes, ⁊ were fellow helpers with the olde rulers of the Jewes. And so the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and prospered, whan Aggeus and Zachary prophecied. And they performed all thinges thorow the cōmaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the denyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes kynges of Persia.

And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxiij. daye of the moneth Adbar in y^e viij. yere of kyng Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes ⁊ the Levites, ⁊ the other that were come out of captiuyte, ⁊ soch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moyses. And in the dedicacion of the temple they offred an hundred oxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lambes, ⁊ xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after y^e nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also ⁊ the Levites stode arayed in the prestly garmetes, after y^e trybes, ouer all y^e workes of the LORDE God of Israel, acordinge to y^e boke of Moyses, and the porters by all the doores.

And the children of Israel (wth those y^e were come out of captiuyte) helde the Passouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Levites were sanctified.

The iij. booke of Esdras.

They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Levites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kyled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the prestes & for themselves. And the childre of Israel y^e came out of captiuyte, & escaped fro all y^e abhominacions of the heithē, sought the LORDE, and kept the feast of unleuened bred viij. daies longe, eatinge & drynkynge & were mery before the LORDE: y^e the LORDE had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria, & comforted their handes to the workes of y^e LORDE God of Israel.

The viii. Chapter.

After him, whan Artaxerxes the kynge of y^e Persias raigned, there wēte vnto him Esdras the sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia, y^e sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, y^e sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amarias, y^e sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Boccus, y^e sonne of Abisū, y^e sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, y^e sonne of Aaron y^e first prest. This Esdras wēte vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderstandinge in y^e lawe of Moyses, y^e was genē of the LORDE God of Israel, to be taught & done in dede.) And y^e kynge fauoured him, & byd him greate worshippe and honoure, after all his desyres. There wente vp with him also certayne of y^e children of Israel, of the prestes, of y^e Levites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of y^e temple at Jerusalem.

In the viij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerxes, in the v. moneth, y^e is in the viij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, & came the hye waye to Jerusalem after his commaundement, like as the LORDE had prospered their iourney. For in these Esdras gat greate instrucciō, y^e he shulde leaue none of y^e thinges behynde, which were in y^e lawe & cōmaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes & iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerxes, & deliuered y^e wrytinges (y^e were come fro Artaxerxes the kynge) to Esdras the prest & reder of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is y^e cōpye of y^e letter: Kynge Artaxerxes sendeth his gretinge vnto Esdras the prest & reder of the lawe of y^e LORDE: Of frendshipe & good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the Jewes, of y^e prestes & Levites in my realme, which desyret h & is contēt to go wth the vnto Jerusalem, y^e he maye do it. Therefore yf eny be mynded to beare the cōpany, let thē come together, & go wth the (like as I am contēt & my vij. frendes my cōncelers:) to se what they do at Jerusalem & in Jewry, & kepe y^e thinges acordinge as thou hast in y^e lawe of the LORDE: & to bringe the gistes vnto God the LORDE of Israel, y^e I & my frendes haue promysed to Jerusalem, & all the syluer & golde y^e is in y^e countre of Babilon, vnto y^e LORDE to Jerusalem, wth the thinge y^e is geuē for the people in the LORDE S temple at Jerusalem: See that the same syluer & golde maye be gathered, and open, rammes, shepe & goates and other that belōge to these thinges: and that they maye offer sacrifices vnto the LORDE, vpon the auter of the LORDE, which is at Jerusalem.

And what so ener thou & thy brethre wyl do wth the syluer & golde, y^e do after y^e mynde, & after the cōmaundement of the LORDE thy God: & like wyse wth all the holy vessels, y^e are geuē the for the seruyce of the house of the LORDE thy God: & other thinges what soeuer is necessary for the to the worke of the temple, y^e shalbe geuē the of the kynges treasure: & loke what thou with thy brethre wilt do with the golde and syluer, that do after y^e wil of the LORDE. And I kynge Artaxerxes haue commaunded the keepers of y^e treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what soeuer Esdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it shalbe geuen him: tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lyke maner: Of come also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdrith vessels of wyne, and other plenteous thinges without nombre. Let all thinges be done after the lawe of y^e hyest God, that the wraith of God aryse not in the realme of the kynge and of his sonnes. I commande you also, that ye requyre no taxinge ner tribute of the prestes, Levites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (O Esdras) set thou iudges and arbiters in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wysdome of God: and lerne all soch as are ignorant in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynst the lawe, be punyshed: whether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banyshe.

Then sayde Esdras y^e wryter: Blessed be y^e God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so good a mynde and wyll in to the hert of the kynge, to magnifie his house y^e is at Jerusalem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of y^e kynge, of his counsell, of his frendes and of his nobles. And so I was steadfast in my mynde, accordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the heades (after their kynreds & houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babylon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerxes: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonus. Of y^e sonnes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the sonnes of Daud, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia.

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundred and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captayne of Moabylon, Zarai, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Jechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and lxx. with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Job, Abdias Jeheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Salimoth the sonne of Josaphia, and with him an C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij. men. Of the sonnes of Ezead, Johannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonicā those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam y^e sonne of Gebel and Semeias, & with him lxx. men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

As for the sonnes of the prestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, & Eccelom, and Masman, & Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Joribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū (these were the leders and men of experience) & I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Lobdeus, which was by the place of the treasury, & commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Lobdeus and to his brethien & to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORDE oure God. And w^{ch} the mightie hāde of oure LORDE God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experience, from amonge the sonnes of Moosilius, the sonne of Levi, y^e sonne of Israel, Sebebeiam & the sonnes & his brethre Asbin & Anim, of whom there were xviij. From amonge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, & their sonnes were xx. men. And of them y^e serued in the temple, whom Daud had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministered for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wytyng.

Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto y^e yonge men before the LORDE, y^e I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney & a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure children and for the catell, because of the layenges awayte: & I durst not requyre of the kynge men of horse & of fote, to conueye vs safely agaynst oure enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that y^e power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that sette him to their whole hert. And therfore we besought God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge y^e rulers of the people, & from y^e prestes of y^e temple xij. men, & Sebeia & Asania, & ten men of their brethien with them. And I weied the golde & the syluer & all y^e prestly ornamētes of the house of o^r God, which the kynge & his counsell, & his prynces & whole Israel had geue. And whan I had weied it, I gaue the an C. talētes in syluer, an C. talētes of syluer vessell, an C. talētes of golde, & of golde vessell seue tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, & saide vnto the: ye also are holy vnto the LORDE, & the vessels are holy, & the golde & the syluer is promised vnto the LORDE the God of o^r fathers. Be diligent now & kepe it, vntill the tyme y^e ye deliuer it to the rulers of the people, to y^e prestes, to the Leuites & to y^e pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Jerusalem, & in the chambie of the house of oure God.

So y^e prestes & the Leuites which receaued of me the golde, the syluer & the vessell, brought it to Jerusalem into the temple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Jerusalem. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weied golde & syluer was deliuered in y^e house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Joi the prest, & w^{ch} him was Eleazar y^e sonne of Phineas, and with the were Josabbus y^e sonne of Jesnet, Medias & the sonne of Banus, & certayne of the Leuites to the nombre & to the waighe: & the waight of them was writte vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuite, they offred sacrifice vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: enē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxvi. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thankofferinge, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And y^e kinges cōmission deliuered they vnto y^e steward

Now whan these thinges were done, the rulers came vnto me, and sayde: The generation of Israel, the prynces, y prestes and Levites, the straunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vncleynesse, from the Cananites, Hethites, Pherecites, from the Moabites, Egipcians z Edomites. For both they and their sonnes haue mengled themselves with the daughters of them, z the holy sede is mixte with the outlandish heithen, z sens the begynnynge of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As soone as I had herde these thinges, immediately I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out y hayre of my heade z my beerd, z sat me downe sorowfull z heuy. So all they that were moued therowthe worde of the God of Israel, came vnto me: and I sat still full of heuines vntill the euenynge sacrifice.

Then stode I vp fro fastinge, hauynge rente clothes z the holy garnet, kneled downe vpon my knees, helde out my handes vnto y S LORDE, z sayde: O LORDE, I am confounded z ashamed before thy face, for oure synnes are become many vpon oure heades, z o' wickednesses are exalted vnto the heane: for sens y tyme of o' fathers we are in greate sinne vnto this daye. And for the synnes of vs z o' fathers, we w' oure brethren z w' oure prestes haue bene deliuered vnto the kynges of the earth, in to the swerde, z in to captiuite, z became a spoyle with confucion z shame vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy y we haue gottē of the: in y thou hast lest vs a rote z a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to discover oure light in the house of y LORDE o' God, z geue vs meate at all tymes of o' ministracion. And whan we were in captiuite, we were not forsaken of the LORDE oure God: but he made the kynges of persia gracions z fanourable vnto vs, so y they gaue vs vytayles z meate, yee z leue to buylde vp the tēple of oure LORDE God agayne, to repayre the wasted places of Sion, and to dwell in Jewry z Jerusalem. And now O LORDE, what shall we saye, hauynge all these thinges in possession? For we haue broken thy cōmaundementes, which thou gavest vnto vs by the handes of thy seruauntes the prophetes, sayenge: The londe y ye go vnto, z y is geuen you for an heretage to haue in possession, is defyled with the vncleynes z fylthynges of the heithen, z with their abhominacion have they polluted it altogether. Therefore shal ye not ioyn your daughters vnto their sonnes, ner marry yo' sonnes vnto their daughters: Moreover, ye shall neuer set to make peace w' them, y ye maye increase z eat the best in the lande, z y ye maye denyde y inheritaunce of the lande vnto yo' children for evermore. As for the thinge y now happeneth vnto vs, it cometh all for o' wicked workes z greate synnes. yet hast thou geuen vs soch a rote, y we are come agayne in to o' ewne londe: and we are so wicked, y we haue broke thy statutes z cōmaundementes agayne, z mengled o' selues w' the vncleynes of the outlandish heithen. O LORDE, art thou angry with vs? wilt thou rote vs cleane out? y oure rote z name remayne nemore? O LORDE God of Israel, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet vnto this present daye. And behold, now are we before y in o' synnes, now can we not stonde before the in them.

And whan Esdras with this prayer had knowleged the synne, wepinge, z lyēge flatt vpon the grounde before the tēple, there gathered vnto him from Jerusalem a greate multitude of men z women, of yonge men z maydens, for there was a very greate wepinge and meurnynge in the cōgregation. So whan Jechonias the sonne Jeheli one of the children of Israel cried, he sayde vnto Esdras: we haue synned agaynst the LORDE, because we haue married outlandish women of the heithē. Now art thou ouer all Israel. We wil sweare an ooth therfore vnto y LORDE, y we shal put awaye all o' wyues which we haue take of the heithē, w' their childre: like as it is appoynted the by o' fore elders. Stonde vp then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs acordige to the lawe of y LORDE: for the matter belongeth vnto y, z we wyll helpe the, quyte thy self manly. So Esdras arose, and toke an ooth of the rulers of y prestes z of y Levites z of all Israel, to do after these thinges, and they sware.

The IX. Chapter.

Then Esdras stode vp from the cūrte of the tēple without, z wente in to the chāber of Jonathas the sonne of Hasabub, z remayned there, z ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was made a proclamacion in all Jewry z at Jerusalem, for all soch as were gathered at Jerusalem, for all soch as were gathered at Jerusalem out of captiuite, y who so ever came not to Jerusalem within two or thre dayes (acordinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of counsell) his goodes shulde be taken from him, & he excluded from the cōgregation of the captiuite. And in thie dayes were all they of the trybe of Juda & Ben Jamin gathered together at Jerusalem, the xx. daye of y^e ix. moneth. And y^e whole multitude sat t^rē blinge in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Esdras arose vp, & sayde vnto them: ye haue done vnrighteously, in that ye haue taken outlandish wyues to mariage, & so to increase the synnes of Israel. And now knowlege the same, & geue prayse vnto the LORDE God of oure fathers, & perfourme his wil, departinge from the heithen of the londe, & from the outlandish wyues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce, & sayde: like as thou hast spokē, so wil we do. But for so moch as the people are many, & y^e wynter here, we maie not stōde without y^e house: agayne, this worke is not a thinge, y^e can be fynished in a daye or two, for we be many y^e haue synned in these thinges: O the netherfore, y^e the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs, and as many as haue outlandish wyues, the prestes also and iudges of euery place, maye stonde in the tyme appoynted, tyll they lowse vp the wrath of the LORDE in this busynes.

Then Jonathas the sonne of Ezei, & Ozi as and Thecam receaued y^e charge of this matter, & Bozoramus, & Leius and Sabatheus helped the therto. After this, all they stode vp y^e were come out of captiuite. And Esdras the prest chose vnto him the pryncipall men from amonge the sachers accordinge to their names, & in the new moone of the tenth moneth they sat together, to examen this matter. And so the matter was a determininge (concernynge the men y^e had outlandish wyues) vntill the new moone of the first moneth. And of the prestes y^e had mixte the selues wth outlandish wyues, there were founde: Of the sonnes of Jesu the sonne of Josede & his brethren, Mazeas, Eleazer, Joribus & Joadens, which offred them selues to put awaye their wyues, & to offre a ramme for their ignoraunce. And of the sonnes of Semmeri, Masseas, & Elses & Jeelech Azarias. Of y^e sonnes of Josera, Limosias, Zismaen, Nathanea, Jussio, Jeddus, & Talsas. And of the Levites, Josabbus, Semeis and Colnis, Caletas, Sactreas, Colnas and Eliomas. Of the syngers of the Sactuary, Elarib, Zactarus. Of the porters, Sallumus & Tolbanes. And of Israel, of the children of Soro, Osi & Xenias, & Geddias, & Melchias, Michelus, Eleazarns, Jemebias & Banas. And of the childre of Jolaman, Chan-as, Zachary, Jezrelus, Jobbins, Erimoth & Elias. And of y^e sonnes of Jathaim, Eliadas, Liasamus, & Jochias, Larimoth, Sabdis & Tebedias. And of y^e sonnes of Zebes, Johanes Amanias, Zabbias, & Emeus. And of the sonnes of Bannus, Olammus, Maluchus, Jeddus, Jasub, Asabus & Jerimoth. And of y^e sonnes of Addin, Naatus & Moosias & Calcus & Raanas Maasuas, Marthachias, Besel, Bannus, and Manasses.

And of the sonnes of Naue, Nones, Afeas, Melchias, Sameas, Suno, Ben Jamin, Malchus & Marras. And of the sonnes of Asom, Carianeus, Mathathias, Bannus, Eliphalach, Manasses, Semei. Of the sonnes of Bannus, Jeremy, Moedias, Abamas, Johel, Baness, Pelias, Jona, Marimoth, Eliasib, Mathaneus, Eliasib, Ouzas, Dielus, Smedius, Zambus & Joseph. Of y^e sonnes of Nobens, Jdelus, Mathathias, Sabadus, Zecheda, Sedmi, Jesseus, & Banas. All these had takē outlādish wemē to mariage, & they put the awaye wth their childre.

The prestes & Levites, & all they y^e were of Israel, dwelt at Jerusalem & thorow out all y^e londe, in the new moone of the seventh moneth, & the childre of Israel were in their dwellynge. And y^e whole multitude came together vpon y^e floore at y^e east syde of the holy porte of y^e tēple. And they spake vnto Esdras y^e hie prest & reder, y^e he wolde brynge y^e lawe of Moses, which was geue of y^e LORDE God of Israel. So Esdras the hie prest brought the lawe vnto the whole multitude, to man and woman, & to all prestes, y^e they might heare the lawe, in the new moone of the seventh moneth. And he red in y^e floore y^e is before y^e holy porte of y^e tēple, from the mornynge early vntill the evenynge, before men & women. And they applied their mynde all vnto the lawe.

And Esdras the prest & reder of y^e lawe stode vp vpon a scassfolde of wodde, which was made therfore: & vpon his right hande there stode by him Mathathias, Samus, Ananias, Azarias, Orias, Ozechias, & Balsamus: Vpon his lefte hāde stode Galdeus, Misael, Malachias, Abuschas, Sabus, Tiabadias, & Zachary. Then toke Esdras y^e booke before the whole multitude, for he was y^e pryncipall and had in most hono^r of the all. And whā he had red out y^e lawe, they stode all straight vp vpon their fete. So Esdras praysed the LORDE the most hye God, the Almighty God of hoostes. And all y^e people answered, Amen: & helde vp their hādes, fell downe flat vpon the earth, & praysed y^e

Then spake Acharathes vnto Esdras the hye prest & reder, & to the Leuites y taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: & all they y had herde the lawe, wepte. So Esdras sayde: Departe yo^r waye then, & eate the best, & drynke the sweetest, & sende giftes vnto them y haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, & sent rewardes vnto the y had nothinge, y they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Jerusalem to helde the feast, acordinge to the couenaunt of y LORDE God of Israel.

- Chap. XVI. Punishment vpon the Zethen, and how the people of God shal behaue them selues therein.

The first Chapter.

The seconde boke of y prophet Esdras: (y sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, y sonne of Helchia, y some of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoc, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarabias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Levi) which was prisoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerxes kynge of Persia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Go thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesses, which they haue done agaynst me, that they maye tell their childers childre the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egippte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, & despyed my counsels. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge & nourture. How longe shal I forbear them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sakes: Pharaō whis seruantes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne: All y nations haue I destroyed and roted out before them, and in y east haue I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sydon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I led you thorow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begymynge. I gaue you Moses to be youre captayne, and Aaron to be the prest: I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greate wōders haue I done amōge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

E Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I gave you quales to eate, and tentes for yourre succoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and ascribed not yf victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this same daie do ye yet murmure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the wilbernes, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wilbernes, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serued yf Egipcians, then to dye in this wilbernesse. The had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gave you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not I hew yf hardstone, & caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, I covered you with yf leaues of the trees. A good pleasaunt fatt londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saith the LORDE.

D Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: Whan ye were in the wilbernes, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in co yf water, and made the ryuer swete. What shall I do vnto the, O Jacob? Thou Juda woldest not obeye me. I wil turne me to another people, & vnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsake me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. Whan ye call vpo me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to comytt manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE.

E Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a noisse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father? I gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chickens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. Whan ye offere vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for youre solempne feast dayes, youre newmoones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken. I sent vnto you my seruantes the prophetes, whom ye haue taken and slayne, and torne their bodies in peces, whose bloude I wyll requyre of youre handes, sayeth the LORDE.

The ij. Chap. Ho. ix.

E Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: I yourre house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde both yf strawe: youre children shal not be frute full, for they haue despy sed my commaundement, and done yf thinge yf is euell before me. Yourre houses wil I geue vnto a people yf shal come, and they yf neuer herde me, shal beleue in me: & they vnto whō I neuer shewed token, shal do the thinge yf I comaunde the. They haue sene no prophetes, yet shal they call their synnes to remembrance, and knowlege the. I repute me vnto the grace, that I wil do for the people which is to come, whose children reioyse in gladnes: & though they haue not sene me wth bodily eyes, yet in spiete they beleue the thinge that I saye. And now brother, beholde what greates worshipec, and se yf people that cometh from the east, vnto whom I wyll geue the dukedome of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of Oseas, Amos, and Micheas, of Joel, Abdy, Jonas, Naum and Abacuc, of Sophony, Aggeus, Zachary and Malachy, which is called also an angel (or messanger) of the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

E Thus sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue the my comaundementes by my seruantes yf prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despy sed my counsels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow & forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heynies haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE yf God, and done yf thinge that is euell before him. But what shall I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsaken: go youre waye (o my children) and are mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these childre, which wolde not kepe my couenaunt: yf thou brynge them to cofucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatred abroad amonge the heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorn of my couenaunt.

Go vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and asphes. Euen so also wyll I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. be haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the everlastyng tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oymment: they shal nether labour ne be weery. Go ye youre waye, & ye shall receaue it. Praye for yo^r selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therein. Now is the kyngdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heaue and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y^e LORDE. Mother embrace thy childien, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

C And those that be deed wyl I raise vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of y^e graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the childien, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruantes Esay and Jeremy, after whose counsell I haue sanctified & prepared for the, xij. trees with dyuerse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylk and hony, & seuen mountaynes, wher vpon there grewe roses and lilies, wherein I wyl fyll my childien with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to y^e poore: defende the cofortlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorne: defende the crepell, and let the blinde come in to y^e sight of my clarites. Keep the olde & yonge within thy walles: where so euer thou fyndest the dred, take them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurreccion. Holde still (O my people) and take y^e rest, for thy quyetnes is come. Feed thy childien O thou good noyse, stablish their fete: As for the seruantes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl sette the from thy nombre, vexe not thy self.

For when the daye of trouble and heynenes cometh, other shal wepe and be sorowfull, but thou shalt be merry and plenteous. The heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothyng agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal cover the, so that thy childien shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childie, for I wyl deliuer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childie, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Almightye.

The ij. Chap.

Embrace thy childie, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Esdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But when I came vnto the, they set me at naught, and despysed the commaundement of y^e LORDE. And therfore I saye vnto you O ye heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be ready to the rewarde of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shal shyne vpon you for euermore. Sle the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulness of youre glory. I testifie my sauoure openly: O receaue the gift y^e is geuen you, and be glad, geuyng thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heauenly kyngdome. Arise vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmetes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shutt vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy childien whom thou longedest for, is fulfilled: beseeke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnynge, maye be halowed.

I Esdras sawe vpon the mount Sien a greate people, whom I coud not nombre, & they all praysed the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuyng. And in the myddst of the there was a yonge man of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marvelled at greatly. So I axed y^e angell, & sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortall, and haue testified & knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge personne is it, that crowneth them, & geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is y^e sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commend them, that stode so stiffly for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thynges and how greate wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene.

The III. Chapter.

In the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I was at Babilon & laye troubled vpon my bed, & my thoughtes came vpon ouer my hert: for I sawe y^e desolacion of Sion, & the plenteous wealth of them y^e dwelt at Babilon: & my spiete was sore moored, so that I begane to speake fearfull wordes to the most hiest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnyng, whan thou plantedst y^e earth (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundment vnto y^e people, and a body vnto Adam, which was a creature of thy handes, and hast breched in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradise, which garde of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundment to loue y^e waye, which he transgressed, & immediately thou appoyntedest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people & kynnedes out of nombre. And euery people walked after their owne wil, and byd nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despyed them.

But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Where theles one of them thou ledest: namely, Noe with his household, of whom come all righteous men. And it happened that, whan they y^e dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greete people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, thou didest chosethe a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an euertlasting couenaunt with him, promysinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Jacob thou didest chosethim, and put backe Esau. And so Jacob became a greete multitude.

And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egypte, thou broughtest the vpon to the mount Sion, bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouyng the grounde, makynge the depthes to shake, and troublynge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Jacob, and diligence vnto the generacion of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from the that wicked hert, that thy lawe mighte brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bore a wicked hert, transgressed, and was euer come, and so be all they y^e are borne of him. Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. Then didest thou raise the vp a seruant called David, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offere vpon incense and sacrifice vnto thetherin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabiteurs of the cite forsoke the, and in all thinges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite ouer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, y^e they shal therefore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greate wickednesse, that it coude not be nombred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in y^e xxx. yeare) my hert sayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and sparest y^e wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, & this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceaue how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, y^e knoweth the, sauynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued y^e couenautes, as Jacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their labo hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the heithē, & I se, y^e they be ryche & wealthy, & thynke not vpon y^e commaundementes. Weye thou therefore oure wickednesse now in y^e balaunce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be nowhere founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, y^e hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and heithen.

The III. Chapter.

B iij

The iiij. booke of Esdras

Unto the angell that was sent vnto me (whose name was Uriel) gave me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē too much vpon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehendē the waye of the hysst. Then sayde I: yee my lord. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desirest to se, and I shal shewe the from whence the wicked hert cometh. And I sayde: tell on my LORDE. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: If I shulde axe the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greate water springes are vpon y firmamēt? Or how greate water sprynges are in the begynnynge of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peraduenture thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to y depe ner hell, nether dyd I ever clymme vp in to heauen. Nevertheless now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thou hast trauayled, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answer of them.

He sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and soch as are growne vp with y, canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to cōprehendē the waye of the hysst, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstōde the corrupcion y is euident in my sight? Thē sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, thē that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffer, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wēte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deuycce and sayde: Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddes.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuycce, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wod, that we maye make oure londe the wyder. The thought and deuycce of the wod was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewise to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stopped them.

The iiij. Chap.

If thou were iudge now betwyxe these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuysed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me and sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: enen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstōde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstōde the thinges, that are aboue the heauens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseeke the LORDE, let me haue vnderstōdinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie medle with all: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loved) is geuen ouer, to be punished of vngodly nacids, and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenautes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thinges haue I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt marvel, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehendē the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, for this worlde is full of vnrightheousnesse and weatnes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou axest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruccions therof is not yet come. If the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where y euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come y is sowne with y good. For the come of euell seede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnynge, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme: and how moch shal he yet brynge forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

Pondre now by thy self, whā y come of euell seede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fylle? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are y yeares few and euell? And he answered me, sayēge: Hast not thou too much vpon the hysst, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not þe soules also of the righteous are question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan cometh the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpo this Jeremiel the archangel gaue them answere, and sayde: Euē whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balance: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peradventure it is not, that the barne of the righteous shal not be fylled, because of the synnes of the that dwell vpon earth.

apoc. 6. b

S So he answered me, and sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and are her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childe shal be borne, yf byrth eny longer within her. The sayde I: No LORDE, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secreete places of soules are like þe priuie chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that traualleth, maketh haist, whan the tyme and necessity of the byrth is at hande: Euē so doth she haist to deliuer it that is committed vnto her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shal be shewed the from the begynnyng. Then answered I and sayde: If I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therfore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come than is past, or more past than is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

G And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpo y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, and beholde, an whote burnyng onē wente over before me: and it happened þe whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this the re wente over before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne w a storme: and whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remained still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more than the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, even so þe measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: Maye I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shal happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokes wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of the in a parte: but as touchinge y life, I maye not shewe the, for I am not sent therfore.

The V. Chapter.

Wherthelesse, as concernyng the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greete nombre, and the waye of the trueth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from saich: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge ago. And the lōde that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after þe thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone thre tymes in the daye, and bloude shal droppe out of wodde, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe iniquyte: and even he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the soules shal flye, and the Sodomitysh see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof.

Mat. 24. 2

There shalbe a confusion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, and men struous women shal beare monsters, and sale waters shalbe founde in the swete: one scende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyte and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secreete places, and shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnto righteousness and voluptuousnes haue the vpperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal be another, and saye: Is righteousness gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge optayne: they shal labour, but their wayes shal not prospere.

22

To shewe the soch tokens I haue lene, and yf thou wilt praye agayne, and wepe as now, and fast seven dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fearfulness wente thorow all my body, and my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, held me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

And in the seconde night it happened, þe Salathiel the capayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene? and why is thy countenance so heny? Knowest thou not, þe Israel is committed vnto the, in the lōde of their captynyte? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherds that leaneth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye from me, and come not nye me: & he herde it, and as I sayde, so wete he his waye from me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Oriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that I thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vnto me agayne, & my soule receaued I sperte of vnderstandynge, & I begane to talke wth the most hyest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wode of I earth & of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen I one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole wolde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the grounde thou hast chosen the one lylie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryner: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all I soules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell I are made, thou hast prouyded I one shepe: & amonge all I multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou louedest, thou gauest a lawe, I is proued of all.

D And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? & vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatred I one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde I promyses, & neuer beleued I couenautes? And though thou werest enemye vnto I people, yet shuldest thou punysh the wth thine owne handes. Now whā I had spokē these wordes, the angell I came to me I might afore, was set vnto me, & sayde vnto me: Heare me, & herke to I thinge I I saye, & I shal tell I more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed & troubled for Israels sake. Lenest thou I people better, then him I made them? And I sayde: To LORDE, but of very grefe & cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hyest, and to seeke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not. And I sayde: wherfore LORDE? Where vnto was I berne then? Or why was not my mothers childebed then my grane? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Jacob, and the traualle of my people of Israel.

E And he sayde vnto me: Tobie me I thinges, I are not yet come: gather me together I drioppes, that are scatred abroad: make me I floures grene agayne, I are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shutt vp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who maye knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge wth me? As for me, I am vnwyse: how maye I the speake of the se thinges, wherof thouarest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of the se thinges I I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not synde out my iudgment, or in the ende the lone that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde O LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyl lyften my iudgment vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered & sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature maye not haist about the maker, neither maye the wolde holdethē at once, that shal be created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruant, that thou lyuynge maker hast made the creature lyuynge at once, & the creature bare it: enē so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Are the childebed of a womā, and saye vnto her: If thou bungest forth childre, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therfore, to brynge forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childebed vnto the earth, for those that be sowne vpon it by proesse of tyme.

For like as a yonge childe maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue I ordned the wolde which I made.

And I axed and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geue me a waye, I wyl speake before I: for oure mother of who thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, & now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me & sayde: Are a woman that beareth children, & she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherfore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but lesse of stature? And she shal answer the: They I be borne in the youth of strenght, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the childes bedd fayleth) are othe wyse. Considre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strenght of youth. Then sayde I: L O R D E I beseeke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruunt, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The iij. boke of Esdras.

The VI. Chapter.

Ald he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer yf wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundations of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were stablished, before yf innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer yf highnesses of yf ayre were lifted vp, afore yf measures of the firmament were named, or euer yf chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presente yeares were sought out, and or euer the inuencions of them yf now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that now gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I considre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shal be the partyng asunder of the tymes? Or whan shal be the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abraham vnto Isaac, whan Jacob and Esau were borne of him, Jacobs hande helde first the heele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Jacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the heele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) art thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O L O R D E, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseeke the, shewe thy seruunt the ende of thy tokens, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stode vp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greete mocion, but yf place where thou stoddest shal not be moued. And therfore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundation of yf earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and qua-kereth, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whan I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and hertened: and beholde, there was a voyce yf spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, yf dayes come, yf I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpon earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisicion of them, what they be yf haue hurte equyte wvnrigh-teousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfylled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The booke shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, and the children of a yeare olde shal speake wv their voyces: the womē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shal lyue, and be raysed vp: and sodely shal the sowne places appere as the vnsowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptie, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whan everyman heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shal frendes fight one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so euer remayneth from all these thingen that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not tasted deatch fro their byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned into another meanyng: for euell shalbe put out, and disceare shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal flourish, corrupcion shalbe ouercome: and the truthe, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

And it happened whan he talked wv me, that I looked demurely vpon him, before whan I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe yf, the tyme of yf night for to come.

As thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seue dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, and greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the hyest: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealyng, he hath sene al so thy chastite, which thou hast had ever sence thy youth: and therfore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comfort, and feare not, and haist not with yf tymes that are past to thynte vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, I wepte agayne, and fasted seven dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre weekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert wexed wiche in me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the heyest: for my spiete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (even the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the spiete, and the darcknesses were yet on euery syde, and silence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be seene.

Gen. 1. a

E Upon the seconde daye thou maydest the spiete of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuysion betwixt the waters, that the one parte might remayne above, and the other beneth. Upon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, I the waters were gathered in the seventh parte of the earth: Six partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intent I men might some and occupie husbandrie therein. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greace innumerable frute, & many dyuerse pleasures & desyres of temptacion, floures of chaungeable colour and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Deu. 4. c

Upon the fourth daye thou commaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and I Moone his light: the starres bidest thou sett in ordie, and ganest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man, that was for to be made. Vpon the fift daye thou saydest vnto the seventh parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde brynge forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domine water and without soule, brought forth luyng beastes at the commaundment of God, that all people might praysse thy wonderous workes. Then bidest thou preserve two soules, y one thou caldest Enoch and the other Lemiatan, and bidest separate the one from the other: for the seventh parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou ganest one parte, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherein are a thousande hilles. But vnto Lemiatan thou ganest the seventh parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wylt, and when.

S

The vii. Chap.

Vpon the sixte daye thou ganest commaundment vnto the earth, that before the it shulde brynge forth beastes, catell and all I crepe, & (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest lorde of all thy creatures: O f him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothings, but be like a sperle, and hast likened the abundaunce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rose of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the heyth which haue euer bene reputed as nothings, haue begonne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called y first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent lover) are geuen in to their handes and power. I f the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritaunce in possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

The VII. Chapter.

When it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vpon Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake on LORDE my God. The sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, I it might be depe and greate: but the intraunce is narrow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? I f he wente not thorow the narrow, how might he come in to the brode?

I tem, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intraunce is narrow and sodane, like as y f there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwixt the both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

I f this cite now were geuen to an heye, & he neuer wente thorow this parlous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritaunce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: & when Adam trasgressed my statutes, then was I thinge indged that was done. Then were I intraunces of the worlde made narrow, full of sorow and cranayle: They are but few & euell, full of pavel and labour. For the in traunces of the fore wolde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.

B If they now which are entred in to this wolde, maye not comprehendese straye and vayne thinges, moch lesse maye they comprehend and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible mā: And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall: And why hast thou not receaved in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Deut. 2. 2 The sayde J: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordened in thy lawe, that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Neuertheles the righteous shall suffre straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue lyued vngodly & suffred straye thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge aboue God, and none that hath vnderston- dinge aboue the hyest. For there be many & perishe, because they despyse y lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commandement to soch as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshe.

Neuertheles they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymagined vayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and say- demorouer, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despyed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordi- naunces haue they not bene faithfull & sted- fast, and haue not perfourmed his workes.

C And therfore Esdras, vnto the full, plen- ty: and to the emptye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, & these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bry- de shal appeare: & the earth & now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: & whoso ever is deli- uered from y foresayde euels, shal se my wo- ders. For my sonne Jesus shal be openly de- clared, wth those & be wth him: & they & remay- ne, shal be mery in foure hundred yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Chust dye, and ail men that haue life: and y wolde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seven dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shal remayne. And after se- uen dayes, the wolde that yet awaketh not, shalbe rayled vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in sylence, and the secrete places shal deliuer those that be committed vnto them. And y most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and lōge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shal contynue, y truethe shal remayne, and faith shal waie strōge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewar- de shal be shewed, the righteousnesses shal watch, and the vnrighteousneses shal bea- re no rule.

Then sayde J: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites, & Moses for the fathers & synned in the wyldernes, & he & came a ster- him for Israel, in y tyme of Achas and Sa- muel: and David for y destruccion, and Sa- lomon for them that came in to the Sanc- tuary, & Helias for those that receaved ray- ne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for y people in the tyme of Senna- cherib: & dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Eue so now, seynge y corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righ- teous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherfo- re shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present wolde is not y ende, there remayneth moch honoure in it, therfore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and y begynnyng of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrup- cion vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is lowsed, all myssbeleue taken awaye, righteousness growne, and the verite spronge vp. Then shall no man be able to saue him that is de- stroyed, ner to oppresse him & hath gottē y victory. I answered the, & sayde: This is my first & last sayenge: & it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geue him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heu- nes, & after death to loke for punysment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou & synned, thou art not fallē alo- ne, but we all & come of the. For what pro- fit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we meble wth dead- ly workes: & that there is promysed vs an e- uerlastinge hope, where as we of selues are euell & vayne: & y there are layed vp for vs dwelllynges of health & fredome, where as we haue lyued euell: and that the worships of y hyest is kepte to defende them, which haue led a pacient life, where as we haue walked in y most wicked wayes of all: and that there shalbe shewed a paradysse, whose frute endureth for euer, wherein is freidome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in: for we haue walked in vnplesaunt places: And that the faces of them which haue absteyned, shal shyne aboue the starres, where as oure faces shalbe black and darcke: For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighrecusly, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death?

S The answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion & thought of the barrayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shal suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shal receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life, that thou mayest lyue. Neuertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes a fter h. m. No nor me which haue spoken vnto them, that heuynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruction, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred the selues to be enfourmed in saluacion.

I answered then & sayde: I knowe L O R D E, that the hyst is mercysfull, in y he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon these also that walke in his lawe: and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberrall to geue where as it requyeth: and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the worlde shal not be made lyuynge, with those that dwell therein: He geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made lyuynge. And yf the iudge forgane not those y he healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye y multitude that stryuet, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The VIII. Chapter.

Ald he answered me, sayenge: The most hyest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a symilitude, Esdras: As whan thouapest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch mould, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it y golde cōmeth of.

The viij. Chap.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created, but few shall be preferred. Then answered I & sayde: Then swalowe vp the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the vnderstandinge, for thou art agreed to herten and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophete: for thou hast no longer space geuen the, but only to lyue. O L O R D E, wile thou not geue thy seruant leue, y we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geue sede vnto oure hert, and buylde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that every one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childebed, and thou geueth the members, and thy creature is preferred in fyre and water: & ix. monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserveth and it y is preserved, shal both be kepte together: & whan tyme is, the childebedd deliuereth y thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

For thou hast commaunded the brestes to geue mylke vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou dispest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nurturtest it in thy lawe, and refourmest it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it lyuynge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which wth so greete labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou couldest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preferred.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritance, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Jacob, for whose sake I am grieved: therefore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, even of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstode my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

This is the begynnynge of the wordes of Esdras, before he was receaued: O L O R D E, thou that dwellest in euerlastynge nesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose sile is excedinge hye, whose glory and maiest-

ty maye not be comprehēded, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with trembling, whose keepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynaunce is fearfull, whose lorde dryeth vp the depthes, whose wrath melteth the mountaynes to melt awaye, & whose tructh beareth wytnes: O heare y prayer of thy seruante, and march with thine eares the petition of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so loe geas I haue vnderstonde, I will answer. O loke not vpon the synnes of thy people, which serue y in the tructh. Haue no respect vnto the wicked studies of the Zeythen, but to the desyre of those that kepethy testimonies with sorowes. Think not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be chy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then bestes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in y righteousness and glory: for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

D For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousness: for y righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough toward him?

For of a tructh there is no man amonge them that be boine, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done amysse. For in this (O L O R D E) thy righteousness & thy goodnes shall be praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not rych in good workes.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and accordinge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cosidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destruccio, but I wyll reioyse ouer the worke and thought of y righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgramege, the holymakynge and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the husband man soweth much sēde vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yett allwaye the thinge that is sowne or planted is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

I answered then & sayde: If I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbande mans sēde perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to much rayne vpon it: Euen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and lictened him vnto the husbande mans sēde. Be not wroth at vs (O L O R D E) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritance: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for soch as be to come. For thou wastest yett much, seynge thou mayest loue my creature aboue me: I haue oft times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art maruelous before the Zeyst, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, y thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate wretchednes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in y worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstonde thou for thy self, and sette out glory for soch as be like the: for vnto you is paradysse opened, the tre of life is planted, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wysdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moth is hyd from you, & into hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulnes. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortallite. And therefore are thou no more questions, concerninge the multitude of them that perish. For they haue taken libertie, despysed the Zeyst, thought some of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Morouer, they haue troben downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of is made ready for you: Euen so is thyrist and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnthanfull vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therfore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to soch as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORD, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begynne to do at the last: but at what tyme and whan, thou hast not shewed me.

The IX. Chapter.

He answered me then and saide: I tell thee thou the tyme diligently in it self, whan thou seest that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde yf before: so shalt thou vnderstande, that it is the very same tyme, wherin the thyest wil be gynnynge to vylite the worlde, which he made. And whan there shalbe some earthquake and vprore of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstande, that the most thyest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tymes also of the thyest haue playne begynnynge in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And every one that shalt be saved, and shall be able to escape by his workes & by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserved from the saide perils, and shall see my sauicure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse, which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytefully, shall dwell in paynes.

For soch as in their life haue receaved benefites, and haue not knowen me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and whan they had yet open roome of amendinge and conuersion, & vnderstode not, but despyed it: yf same must knowe it after death in payne. And therfore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngedly shalbe punyshed, & how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: I haue talked before & now I speake, and wyl speake also hereafter, that there be many moo of them which perishe, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppe.

The ix. Chap.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the seede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also yf worke: and as the husbandman is himself, so is his husbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, wher in they shulde dwell, then was there no man that withstode me. Now whan every one was, and the maker also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was perill, because of yf thoughtes that were come in to it. And I saue, and spared the greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plancke from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish the, which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape & wynebery be kepte: euen my plancke: for with greates labour haue I made it vp.

Nevertheless yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seven dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to yf felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eat one ly of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eat floures onely. Praye vnto the thyest continually, so will I come, and talke with the.

So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge yf floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and yf meate of the same satisfied me. After seven dayes I sat vpon the grasse, & my heart was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the thyest, and saide: O LORD, thou yf shewest thy self vnto vs, thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, whan they came out of Egypte, and thou spakest, sayenge: Heare me O Israel, and marke my wordes thou seede of Jacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, & ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaved the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinance and statutes, & the frute of yf lawe was not declared: for it mighte not, for whyt it was thine. For they that receaved it, perished, because they kepte not yf thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the ground receaueth seede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe & are broken, which are sowne or putt therein. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we & haue receaved the lawe, perish in synne, and oure hert also which receaved the lawe: not withstandinge the lawe perisheth not, but remayneth in his labour.

4. El. 10. d

And whan I considered these thinges in my hert after this maner, I looked aboute me with myne eyes, and vpon the right syde I sawe a woman, which mourned sore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peces, & she had asshes vpon hir heade.

I The let I my thoughtes go, & I was in, & turned me vnto her, & sayde: wherfore wepest thou? why art thou so sory & discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewaile my self & take yet more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, & brought very lowe. And I saide vnto her: what ayleth y? Or who hath done eny thinge to y? & tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and barren, and haue had an husband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do no thinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to y. & yest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy hand mayden, looked vpon my misery, considred my trouble, and gaue me a sonne, and I was glad of him, so was my husband also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greate honoure vnto y. Mightie. And I nourished him with greate trauayle. So whan he grewe vp, & came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The X. Chapter.

21 Wid it happened that whan my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: the ouerhrew we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to comforte me. The toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: & whan they had all rested, & they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remayne here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditations and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heynnes and mournynge, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion & mother is all wo full and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heynnes, & make oure mone (for we be all sorowfull.) As for the heynnes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnynge all men are borne of her, & other shal come: and beholde, they walke almost all into destruccion, and many of them shal be roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournynge, then she, that hath lost so greate a multitude? and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournynge is not like the mournynge of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heynnes: as for the earth, acordinge to the ordynance of y earth onely, so that many are gone awaye in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle & sorowe, enen so the earth also from the begynnynge geueth hir frute vnto man, for him & made her. And therfore withholde thy sorowe and heynnes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto y, beare it strongly. For yf thou iudgest the march & ende of God to be righteous and good, and receavest his counsell in tyme, thou shalt be commended therein. So thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbande.

Heb 12.2

And she sayde vnto me: that wyll I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I commoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be couceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Jerusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure altier broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synging layed downe, the thankesgeuynge put to sylence, & myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candelstick is quenched, y Arke of the couenaunt is take from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon our vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Levites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues raryshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure childre destroyed, oure yongemen are brought in bōdage, and oure stronge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which seale is y greates of all) is low sed vp from hir worshipe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therfore shake of y greate heynnes, C

and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vnto the, and that the hyest maye geue the rest from y^e labour and traualle. And it happened, that whan I was talkynge with her, hir face dyd shyne & glyster, so that I was afrayed of her, and mused what it might be. And immediatly she cast out a greete voyce, very fearfull, so that y^e earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I looked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nemeze: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundation.

4.Es.4.a Then was I afrayed, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Daniel the angel, which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many considerations and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakynge these wordes, he came vnto me, and looked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge vexed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sory? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and 4.Es.9.a I have done a cordinge vnto thy wordes, I wente into the felde, and there haue I sene D things, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stode vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake onto me my LORD, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. Or shall my vnderstandynge be disceaue, and my mynde? But now I beseeke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauit of this wonder. He answered me the and sayde: heare me, and I shal enfourme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afrayed, for the hyest hath opened many secreete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greete lamentacion for Sion: and therfore vnderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle while agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mourninge, and thou hast comforted her: Neuer theles now seist thou the licfnes of the woman nomore, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer:

The xi. Chap.

The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion: and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeares vnfructfull and baren, those are the xxx. yeares, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeares Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she nourished him with labour, that was the dwellinge of Jerusalem. But where as the sonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Jerusalem. And thou sawest hir licfnesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what els happened vnto her, I haue shewed y^e. And now God seyth, that thou art sory in thy mynde, and suffrest from y^e hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir clearnesse, and the faynes of hir bewtye.

And therfore I had the remayne in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knewe y^e the hyest wolde shew this vnto the, therfore I commaunded the to go into the felde, where no foundation ner buyldinge is. For in the place wherethe hyest wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therfore feare not, and let not thine hert be afrayed, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greete it is, and how greete thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehend. For thou art blessid aboue many other, and art called with the hyest, as y^e few. But tomorrow at night thou shalt remayne here, and so shal y^e hyest shewe the visions of hye thynges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in y^e last dayes. So I slepte the same night like as he comaunded me.

The XI. Chapter.

2 Then sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from y^e see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Morouer I sawe, that the Aegle flew wth his wynges, and raigned vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe y^e all thynges vnder heaven were subiecte vnto him, and no man spake against him, no nor one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, &

B gaue a sounde wth his fethers, & a voyce saye
ge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe euery mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Nevertheless I sawe, & the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his contrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them.
And I looked, & beholde, vpon the right syde
there arose one fether, & raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, & whan it raigned, the ende of it came, & the place therof appeared nomore. So the nexte folowinge stode vp, & raigned, & had a greate tyme: & it happened, & whan it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, & sayde:
heare thou & hast kepte in the earth so longe,
this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after & atteyne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thir-de, & raigned as the other afore, & appeared nomore also. So wrote it with all the residue one after another, so & euery one raigned, & thē appeared nomore. Thē I looked, & beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers & folowed were set vp vpon the right syde, & they might rule also: and some of thē ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of thē were set vp, but ruled not. After this I loked, & beholde, & xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: & there was nomore vpon the Eagles body, but two heades that rested, & sixe fethers. Then sawe I also, & the sixe fethers were parted in two, & remained vnder the heade, & was vpon the right syde, for the foure continued in their place. So I looked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by thē selues to raigne: & whā they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myd-dest, for that was the greater of the two hea-
des. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled wth him, and the heade was turned wth them & were by him, & ate vp &
two vnder wynges, & wolde haue raigned.

B But this heade put & whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those & dwelt vpon earth with much labour, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the fowles, that haue bene. After this I looked, and beholde, the heade that was in the middest, suddenly appeared nomore, like as & wynges:

then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, & ouer these that dwelt therein.
And I behelde, & lo, the heade vpon the right side, deuoured it that was vpon the left syde.
And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me:
loke before the, and conside the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng hasty-ly out of & wod, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Eagle, and sayde: heare thou, I wyl talke wth the, and the & yest shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure bestes, whom I made to raig-ne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that & ende of their times might come thorow the?

And the fourth came, and ouerwonne all the bestes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde wth greate fearfulness, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth to the most wicked labour, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth wth disceate, & the earth hast thou iudged not wth crueth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyet, thou hast loued lyers, and destroyed the dwellynge of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of such as dyd the no harme. Therfore is thy wrongeous dealinge and blasphemy come vp vnto the & yest, and thy pryde vnto
the Almighty. The & yest also hath looked vpon the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abominacions are fulfilled.
And therefore appeare nomore thou Eagle,
and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngacious heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, whan she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for & iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The XII. Chapter.

And it happened whā & Lyd spake the se wordes vnto & Eagle, & & heade & aso-re had & vpperhade, appeared nomore:
neither dyd & foure wynges appeare any more, & came to hī, & were sett vp to raigne, &
their kyngdome was small & full of vproure.

And I sawe, & beholde, they appeared no more, & & whole body of & Eagle was brēt, &
the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked
I out of the trance of my mynde, and from greate feare, and sayde vnto my spiete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in & thou searchest out the wayes of the & yest: lo, yet am I weary in my minde, and very weake in my spiete.

The iij. boke of Esdras

and litle strength is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaued this night. Therefore wil I now beseeke the hysst, & he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, & I sayde: LORDE LORDE

B yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with y before many other, & yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, comforte me then, and shewe me thy seruant the interpretacion & playne differēce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly comforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shewe me y last of tymes.

Dan 7. And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretacion of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the Kingdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother Daniel, but it was not expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

C Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a Kingdome vpon earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the Kingdomes y were before it. In the same Kingdome shal xij. Kinges raigne, one after another. For the secōde shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme thē the other, & this do y xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from y body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that Kingdome there shall aryse greate stryuynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, but shal be set in to his beginnyng. And y eght underwynges which thou sawest haue vnto y wynges of hē, betokene, y in hē there shal aryse eght Kinges, whose tyme shal be but small, & their yeares swifte, & two of them shal beare. But whan the myddest tyme cometh, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto y ende.

And where as thou sawest this heades resting, this is the interpretacion: In his last shal the hysst rayse vp thre Kingdomes, and call many agayne into thē, & they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therein, with moch laboure aboue all those y were before thē. Therefore are they called y heades of the Aegle: for it is they y shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, & y shal perfourme & fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that y greate heade appeared nomore, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpon his bed, & yet with payne, for the two that remaine, shal be slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal denoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

D And where as thou sawest two underwynges vpon the heade that is on the right syde, it signifieth, that it is they, whō the hysst hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small Kingdome, & full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wodd and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukinge him for his vnrightheousnesse, is the wynde, which the hysst hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them lyinge before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal he deliuer with trouble, those y be preserved ouer myne endes: and he shal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnyng. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secreete of the hysst.

Therefore wyte all these thinges y thou hast sene in a booke, and hyde them, and teach thē the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehend and kepe these secretes. But wayte thou here y self yet seven dayes moore, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the hysst to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

E And whan all the people perceaued, y the seven dayes were past, & I not come agayne in to y cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most, & came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, y thou forsakest vs, & syttest here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a griape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darcke place, and as an haven & shippe preserved from y tēpest. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brient with Sion? For we are no better, then they y dyed there: and they wepte w loude voyce. Then answered I thē & sayde: Be of good comforte O Israel, & be not heny thou house of Jacob: for y hysst hath you in remēbraunce, & y Nightie hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forsakē you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of y mysery of Israel, that I might seeke mercy for y lowe estate of yō Sactuary. And now go yō waye home every mā, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wete their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remayned still in the felde seven dayes, as þe angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The XIII. Chapter.

After it happened after the seven dayes, þe I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I looked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenance to consider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, and beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of men out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heauē, to fight agaynst þe man, that came out from þe see. And I looked, and beholde, he graued himself a greete mountayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, and I coude not.

I sawe after these, þe all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afayed, and yet durst they fight. Nevertheless whan he sawe the fearnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapen: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes þe wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myrte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flames, and þe greete storme, and fell with a rushe vpon þe people, which was prepared to fight and brenne the vp everychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust and smoke. Whan I sawe this, I was afayed.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moche people vnto him: some were glad some were sorry, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I full thorow greete feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed þe seruauunt all þe wordes fro þe begynnyng, and hast counted me worthy, y thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpreta- cion of this dreame. For thus I consider in my vnderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, and moche more wo vnto the

that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vnderstonde I þe thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therefore are they come in to greete parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, þe he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se þe thinges þe shal happen in y last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretation of the sight shal I shewe the, and I will open vnto the, the thinge þe thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretation. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes and saith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therefore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanyng of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge vp from the depe of the see, y same is he whom God the hyst hath kepte a greete season, which by his owne self shal deliuer his creature, and he shal ordre the that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, þe out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre and storme, and how þe he lift vp nether swerde ner weapen, but þe the russhinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, þe came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyll deliuer the þe are vpon earth, and in a traunce of mynde shal he come vpon the, and dwell in the earth. And one shal undertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another, one people agaynst another, and one realme agaynst another. Whan this cometh to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and the shal my sonne be declared, whos thou sawest clymme vp as a mā. And whan all y people heare his voyce, every man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, and they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shal be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to overcome him by fightinge. But he shal stōde vpon the toppe of the mount Sion. Nevertheless Sion shal come, and shal be shewed, beyng prepared and buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without eny handes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people þe are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginations: and their paynes wherewith they shal be punysshed, are lickened vnto the flamme: and with out eny labour shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cōpared vnto the fyre.

E And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye presoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom Salmanasar the kynge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer y water, and so came they in to another londe.

Exo. 14. 2
Iosu. 1. d
But they gaue them this counsell, y they shulde leaue the multitude of the heithē, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer man kynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepe in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrates, and God shewed tokens for thē, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yere and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asarech. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, y hyst shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therfore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal defende his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

S Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

1. Reg. 5.
Prour. 7. 8
And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cast nether seeke out ner knowe these chinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretation of the dreame which thou sawest, therfore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstondinge thy mother, and therfore haue I shewed the y treasure of the hyst. After thre dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous chinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to y felde, geuynge prayse and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and

The xiiij. Chap.

because he governeth the same, and soch as is in tyme, and there I satt thre dayes.

The XIII. Chapter.

S Pon the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce vnto me out of the bush, z sayde: Esdras, Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. The spak he vnto me: In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moyses, z talked w him, whā my people serued in Egypte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egypte, z brought him vpo y mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him y secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayēge: These wordes shalt thou declare, z not hyde thē. And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretations which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shalt be turned and remayne w my counsell, and with soch as be like the, vntyll y tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe olde. For the tyme is deuyled in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the: enthe parte: yet remayneth there that, which is after y half of y tenth parte.

B Therfore prepare and ordre thy house, and reforme thy people: comforte soch of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruction: let go from them mortall thoughtes: cast awaye the burchens of man: put of the weak nature: laye vp in some place y thoughtes that are most heuy vnto the, and haist the to flye from these tymes: for soch euell z wickednesse as thou hast now sene happē, shal they do yet moch worse. For the weaker that the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal synne z wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpo earth. For the truth is fled farre awaye, z lesynge is hard at hande. For now haisteth the vision to come, that thou hast sene.

E Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are present. But they y shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhort or rebuke thē? Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they y dwell therein, are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the chinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. If I haue founde grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wyte all that hath bene done in the worlde sence the begynnynge, which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, maye lyue.

The iij. boke of Esdras.

And he answered me, sayenge: Go y waye, gather thy people together, & saye vnto the, that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many bore trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabua, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a candle of vnderstondinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thynges be performed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thynges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thynges shalt thou shew secretly vnto y wyse. Tomorow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

D Then wote I forth (as he commaunded me) and gathered all y people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Our fathers from the begynnyng were straunges in Egypte, from whence they were deliuered, and receaued the lawe of life, which they kepte not, which ye also haue trasgressed after the. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amoge you by the lot to possesse. But yō fathers and ye yō selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, & haue not kepte the wayes which the hyst comāunded you. And for so much as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thyng that had geuen you. And now are ye here and yō brethren amoge you. Therfore ys so be that ye wil subdue yō owne vnderstandinge, and resourne youre hert, ye shal be kepte alieue, & after death shal ye opeyne mercy. For after death shal the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and y names of the vngodly with their woikes shal be declared. Let no mā therfore come now vnto me, ner aye eny question at me these xl. dayes.

E So I toke the fyue men (as he commaunded me) and we wente in to the felde, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayenge: Esdras, Open thy mouth, & drynke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth, & beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colde of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had dronken it, my hert had vnderstondinge, and wysdome grew in my brest: for my spiete was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut nomore. The hyst gaue vnderstondinge vnto the fyue men, y they wote y hie thynges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they ate bried: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wote two hundred & foure boke.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the hyst spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytten, speake openly, y the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe y lxx. last, y thou mayest shew it enely to such as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vnderstondinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The XV. Chapter.

B Beholde, speake thou in the eares of my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyl put in y mouth, saith the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the trouth. Feare not the ymaginacions against y, let not y vnfaichfulnes of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the vnfaichfull shal dye in their vnfaichfulnes. Beholde saith the LORDE, I wil brynge plagues vpon the worlde: y swerde, hunger, death and destruction, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all y earth, and their shamefull woikes are fulfilled.

Therfore saith the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thynges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the seules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therfore saith the LORDE, I wil surely auge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt bloude from amonge them.

Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwell in Egypte, but wyl brynge them out with a mightie hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plagues as a foie, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egypte shal mourne, and the foundations of it shal be smytten with the plague and punysshment, y God shal brynge vpon it.

They that tyll y grounde, shal mourne, for their sides shal be destroyed thow the blastyng and hale, and an horrible starre. No worth y worlde and them that dwell therein, for y swerde & their destruccions draweth nyer & one people shal stode vp to fight against another, & swerdes in their handes. For me shal be vnstedfast, and seme shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and handlinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, & shal not be able. For be cause of their pryde yf cities shalbe brought in feare, yf houses shal shake, and men shalbe afayed. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neighbour, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the hunger of bread, and because of the greace trouble.

B Beholde, I gather & call together all the kynges of yf earth which are from the vprynginge, from the south, from the east and Libanus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue geue them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense thē in their bosome. Thus sayeth yf LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare yf synners, and my swerde shal not ceasse ouer them, that shed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōsumed the foundations of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saith the LORDE. I wil not spare them. So youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all thē that synne agaynst him, and therfore deliuereth he them vnto death and destrucciō: for now are the plagies come vpon the worlde, & ye shal remayne in thē. For God shal not deliuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

B Beholde, an horrible vision cometh frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpon earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afayed: and as the wyld boies out of yf wod, so shal they go out, and with greace power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with thē, and shal waiste the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembringe their byrth, and shal turne aboute swerdinge together in greace power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afayed, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal fle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besegethē, and consume one of thē, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

S Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at yf greace starre vpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the bely, and the smoke of mā vnto yf Camels lytter: And there shalbe greace fearfulness and tremblinge vpon earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afayed, and a tremblinge shal come vpon them.

And then shal there come greace raynes from yf south and from the north, and parte from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal sytte them vp agayne, & the cloude which herayfed vp in wrath, and the starre to cause feare toward yf east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, & the greace cloudes shalbe lift vp, and yf mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afayed and thē yf dwell therein, and that they maye poure out ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hale and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: yf all felde maye be full, and all ryuers, & they shal breake downe the cities & walles, mountaynes & hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasce of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afayed, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heauen, and all they that be aboute her, shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia yf cōfortest thyself also vpon the hope of Babilon, and art a worshippe of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, & hast dected yf daughters i whordome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desyred to cōmytte whordome wth the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and inventions.

Therfore sayeth God: I wil sende plagies vpon the, wyddowhede, pouerte, hōger, warres, and pestilence, to waiste thy houses with destruction and death, and the glory of thy power shalbe dried vp as a floure, whan yf heate aryseth yf is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sicke as a poore wife that is plagued & beate of women: so yf the mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so hate the saith the LORDE: If thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, whan thou wast dronke: set forth the betwye of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therfore shalt thou receaue *rewarde.

*Some saye, no rewarde.

The iij. boke of Esdras

3 Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORD) even so shal God do vnto the, and shal deliuer the in to the plage. Thy childre shal dye of hunger, & thou shalt fall thorow y^e swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, & all thine shal perish wth the swerde in y^e felde. They y^e be in y^e mostaynes shal dye of hunger, & eate their owne flesh, & drinke their owne blode for very hōger of bread & chylst of water. Thou unhappie shalt come thorow the see, & receaue plagés agayne.

In the passage they shall cast downe the flayne cite, & shal rote out one parte of y^e londe, & cōsume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stubble, & they shal be thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy londe, thy wod & thy frute full trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy childien shal they cary awaye captyne, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and marre the beutie of thy face.

The XVI. Chapter.

21 W vnto the Babilon & Asia, wo vnto y^e Egypte & Syria: gyde yo^r selues wth clothes of sack & hayre, and mourne for youre childre, be sory, for yo^r destruction is at hande. A swerde is sent vpon you, & who wil turne it backe? A fyre is kyndled amōge you, & who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, & what is he that wil dryue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hōgrie lyon in the wod? Or maye eny mā quench the fyre in the stubble, whan it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arrowe, y^e is shot of a stronge archer? The mightie LORD sendeth the plagés, & what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled & gone forth in his wrath, & what is he that wil quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, & who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shal not be afrayed? The LORD shal threaten, & who shal not vterly be beaten to poulder at his presence? The earth quaketh, & the foundations therof: y^e see aryseth vp wth waves from the depe, and the floudes of it are unquyete, & the fishes therof also before the LORD, & before the gloey of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe. his arrowes that he shutech, are sharpe, & shall not misse, whan they begynne to be shot in to y^e endes of the woulde.

22 Beholde, y^e plagés are sent, & shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, & shal not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arrowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backward, even so y^e plagés y^e shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wil deliuer me in these dayes? The begynnyng of sorowes & greace mourninge: the begynnyng of deth & greace death: the begynnyng of warres, & the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnyng of euels, & they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plagés come? Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble & anguysh are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye myndefull of y^e scourges.

Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, y^e they shal chynke th^e m selues to be in good case: and even then shal myschefe growe vpoⁿ earth, warres, deth & greace disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpoⁿ earth shal perish of hōger, & the other that escape the hōger, shal the swerde destroye: & the deed shalbe cast out as donge, & there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For y^e earth shalbe waisted, & the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll y^e earth & to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, & who shal p^lucke thē of & gather them? The grapes shal be ripe, & who shal treade thē? For all places shalbe desolate of mē, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, & two in the felde, which shal hyde thē selues in the thicke busshes, & in the clyffes of stones: like as whan there remaine thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly soughe thorow the vynyarde.

Even so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for thē y^e search their houses wth the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste, & the feldes therof shal waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauallye there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no brydegromes: the women shal make lamentacion, hauinge no husblandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shal they be destroyed, & their husblandes shal perish of hunger. O ye scruautes of the LORD, heare these thinges, & marck thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORD, O receaue it: beholde, the plagés drawe nye, & are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauallynge woman, which after y^e ix. moneth brygeth forth a sonne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre afore that the paynes come vpo hir body, & whan the childe cometh to the byrth, they tary not the twynclinge of an eye: Eue so shall not y plagis be slack to come vpon earth, & the worlde shal mourne, & sorowes shal come vpo it enen crysyde.

E O my people, heare my worde, make you redy to the battayll: & in all euell be euen as pylgryms vpon earth. He y selleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: & he y byerth, as one that wil lese. Who so occupieth marchaundies, as he that wynneth not: & he that buyldeth, as he that shall not dwell therein: he that soweth, as one y shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shal get no child: en: & they y marry not, as the wyddowes: & therfore they y laboure, labo^r in vayne. For straungers shal reape their frutes, & spoyle their goodes, euery throwe their houses, & take their childre captiue, for in captiuyte & honger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies wth robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houses, their possi^sions & personnes: the more wil I punyssh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousness hate iniquyte, whan she decketh hir self, and shall accuse her to hir face, whan he cometh that defendeth, which shal make inquisici^on for all synne vpo earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquyte shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousness shal raigne amonge you.

S Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith before the LORDE God & his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all y workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes & their heretes. For he spake but the worde: let the earth be made, & it was made: let the heaue be made, & it was made. In his worde were y starres made, & he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, & the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, & what it conceyneth. He hath shut the see in the myddest of the waters, and wth his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a vowe, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vpo the toppe of the mountaynes, y the floudes might poure downe from y stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of y body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the spere of y Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath searched the groude of all the secretes of the earth.

He knoweth youre ymaginacions & inu^encions, and what ye thynke whan ye synne, & wolde hyde youre synnes. Therfore hath y LORDE searched and sought out all yo^r workes, and he shal leuaye you all. And whan yo^r synnes are brought forth, ye shalbe ashamed before men, and youre owne synnes shal be youre accusers in that daye. What wil ye do? O: how wil ye hyde youre synnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from youre synnes, and forget youre vnrighteousneses, and medle nomore with them: so shal God lede you forth, and deliuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greete multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the yble wth Idols: and they that cōsent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, & trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greete insurreccion vpon those that feare y LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shal spare no man: they shal spoyle and waist soch as feare the LORDE, their goodes shal they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shal it be knowne who are my chosen, & they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saith the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil deliuer you from the same. Be not ye afraid, dispayre not, for God is youre cap tayne.

Who so kepeth my cōmandementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, & let not youre vnrighteousneses be lift vp. Wo be vnto the that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickedneses: like as a Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne & with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The II. Chapter.

After these thinges vpon a solempne daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, & sayde vnto his sonne: Go y waye & brynge hither some of oure trybe, such as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the sirete. And immediatly he leape from his table, lest the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarfe, toke him & bare him pruely in to his house, & whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarfe, he ate his meate with mournynge and feare, remembryng y wortes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: your hye feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heynnes.

But whan y Sonne was downe, he wente his waye & buried h. m. Then all his neighbours reprobued him, sayenge: It is not lōge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the because of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the danger of death, and buriest thou the dead againe? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, & buried them at mydnight.

And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe vpo his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so y he was blynde. This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his paciēce, like as of holy Job. For in somoch as he ever feared God from his yowth vp, & kepte his commandementes, he was not heuy agāst God, that the plague of blyndnes chaūsed vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

Then Tobias toke it heuely, & w^t teares begaime to make his prayer, sayenge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all y wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgmēt. And now O LORDE be mynde full of me, & take no vengeance of my synnes, nether remembre my mysdedes ner y mysdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto y cōmaundmētes, therfore are we spoyled, brought in to captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scattered vs. And now O LORDE, y iudgmentes are greete, for we haue not done acordinge to y cōmannmentes, nether haue we walked in necētly before y. The iiij. Chap. Ho. xxi.

E Upon the thirde daye it chanced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayſed the LORDE, ſayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of our fathers, which whan thou art wretched, ſheweſt mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgeveſt the ſynnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the LORDE turne I my face, vnto the liſt I vp myne eyes. I beſeke yf O LORDE, looſe me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me utterly awaye fro of yf earth. Thou knoweſt LORDE, that I neuer had deſyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my ſoule cleane from all vnclenly luſt. I haue not kepte company with thoſe that paſſe their tyme in ſporte, nether haue I made my ſelf partaker with them that walke in lighte behauiour. Neuertheles an huſbande haue I conſented to take, not for my pleaſure, but in thy feare.

Now peradventure either I haue bene unworthy of them, or els were they vnmercifull for me, for thou happily haſt kepte me to another huſband. For why? thy counsell is not in yf power of man. But who ſo euer loueth the and ſerueth the a righte, is ſure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it ſtandeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in paciẽce, he ſhal haue a reward and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) ſhal deliuer him: and yf his life be in chaſtitynge, that he ſhall haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

For thou haſt no pleaſure in oure dampnation: and why? after a ſort thou makeſt yf wether ſayre and ſtill: after wepinge and heuynes thou geueſt greates ioye. Thy name O God of Iſrael, be prayſed for ever. At the ſame tyme were both their prayers herde in the ſight of the maieſty of the hyeſt God. And Raphael the holy angel of the LORDE was ſent to helpe the both, whoſe prayers came together before God.

The III. Chapter.

When Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his ſonne Tobias, and ſayde vnto him: My ſonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye the in thine hert as a foundation. Whan God taketh awaye my ſoule, burye thou my body, and holde thy mother in honour all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughteſt to remembre, what and how greates parcels ſhe ſuffred for yf in hir wōbe. And whā ſhe alſo hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, burye her beſyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy liſe, and beware, leſt at eny tyme thou conſent vnto ſynne, and leſt thou let ſlippe the commaundementes of the LORDE oure God. Rom. 6.b

Geue allmes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and ſo ſhal it come to paſſe, that the face of the LORDE ſhal not be turned awaye from the. Be mercifull after yf power. Yf thou haſt moch, geue plentifully: yf thou haſt litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For ſo gathereth thou thy ſelf a good reward in the daye of neceſſite. For allmes deliuereth fro death, and ſuff. eth not the ſoule to come in darcknes. A greates comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it. The V. Chapter.

Then answered Tobias his father, and ſayde: father, all that thou haſt commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I ſhal requyre this money, I can not tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token ſhal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then Tobias. c his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwritinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with y for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue y money, whyle I am yet lyuyng.

B Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: I knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of y Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwelleth in Rages a cite of y Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egabehama. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tarry for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then wote Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At y which his father marueled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

C Now whan the angell came in, he saluted him, and sayde: ioye be with the for euermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonne to Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou comiest agayne, I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Arrest thou after the kynred of an hyrlinge, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye y, be not displeased, that I desired to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

D Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waye, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So whan they had prepared all thinges, & they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias bad his father & his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: The staffe of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs. Tob. 10. R

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. If we had bene content w^o o^r pouerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we saue oure soules here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, cure sonne shal come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shal se him. For I trust, that y good angell of God shal beare him company, and ordre well all the thinges that he doeth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left off fro wepyng, & helde hir tongue.

The VI. Chapter.

S O Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and y first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afrayed, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORDE, he cometh vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the cheeke blade, and diuice him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vps the londe, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete. A

Then sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bewels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for me dicynne. Tobias dyd so, and roasted the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as moch as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye y brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe? B

The angell answered him and sayde: If thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryneth awaye all manner of euell spices, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth y same shal come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anoynte or to stroke y eyes withall, wher as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: where wilt thou that we remaine? The angell answered and saide: There is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter C Nu. 26. R called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good belōgeth vnto the, and thou must marry his daughter: and therefore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene married vnto seven husbādes, and they all are deed: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell flew them. I am afrayed therfore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge the in their age wth sorow to their graues.

D Then sayde y^e angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashiō, that they shut God out from the and from their hert, and geue them selues to their owne lust, even as it were an horse and Meele, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon sech hath y^e deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, withholde thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but vnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shal be driuen awaye. The secōde night shalt thou be recreued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shal be borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for any fleshly lust: that in the seide of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The VII. Chapter.

A Then wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel looked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethrien? They saide: Of the trybe of Ephraim, out of the captiuyte of Ninue. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: Knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moche good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mā's father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the necke and kysed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Tobi. 3. b

The viij. Chap. Fo. xxij.

Now whā they had talked together, Raguel bad kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And whā he prayed the to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte then first graunte me my peticion, & promise me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astomyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seven men, that wēte in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like manner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belōgeth thy daughter to wife, therfore might none other haue her.

The sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be married in hir owne kynred, accordinge to the lawe of Moses. And now dowte thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the righthande of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob be with you, ioyne you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wytyng of the mariage. And then made they mery, and praysed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of good cheere my daughter, the LORD of heauen geue the ioye, for the heuynesse that thou hast suffred.

The VIII. Chapter.

Now after y^e they had supped, they brought the yonge man in to her. The thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egypte. The spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Up Sara, let vs make oure prayer vnto God to daye, tomorrow, and overmorrow: for these thre nightes wil we reconcile oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioyne together in y^e bewtye of mariage. For we are the childien of holymen, and we maye not come together as the heithen, & knowe not God.

Tob. 6. d Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, & he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of our fathers, prayse be thou of heauē & earth of the see, welles, & floudes, & of all the creatures that be therein. Thou maydest Adam of the mould of the earth, & gavest him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of childen, in whom thy name be blessed for ever. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruantes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peradventure, as it dyd vnto the other seven men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydes, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, & brought good tydings.

D Then Raguel and Anna his wife prayse d LORDE, and sayde: prayse be thou O LORDE God of Israel, for it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealt mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause the to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offre the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, & thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruantes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, & to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to such as wente by y waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, & meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remaine with him two weekes. As for all the good & he had, he gaue Tobias y one half of it, and made this wrytinge, that the half which remained, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The IX. Chapter.

The ix. Chap.

Then Tobias called vnto him the angel, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes: If I shulde geue myselfe to be y seruant, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I beseeke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruantes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Medes, and deliuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my marriage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requyred me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruantes, and two Camels, & wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytinge, & receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias & some of Toby, how all thinges had happened, & caused him to come to him to y marriage. Now whan he came in to the house of Raguel, he founde Tobias sittynge at y table: & he leape vp, & they kysed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and prayse d God, and sayde: the blessinge of the God of Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right vertuous & iust man, & of one y feareth God, & geueth greate almes. And blessinge haue y wife, and y elders, that ye maye se y children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre seede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the marriage.

The X. Chapter.

Now whyle yōge Tobias made lōge taryenge by reason of y marriage, his father was full of care and heuynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonnetarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peradventure Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begāne he to be very sorowfull, he & Anna his wife with him, & beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appointed. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge countre, thou light of our eyes, thou staff of our age, thou comforte of our life, thou hope of our generaciō?

The booke of Tobias.

Seinge all y thinges that we haue are one ly in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomfited, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man y we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuer theles she might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, looked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cōmyng a farre of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne i lawe: O tary here, and I shall sende a messenger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him y thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte enery daye, and that their hertes are fory.

C So whan Raguel prayed Tobias w many wordes, & he wolde in no wyse heare him, he delyuered Sara vnto him, & the half parte of all his good: in seruauntes and hand-maydes, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in your iourney, and bryng you seith safe & sounde, that ye maye synde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afoie I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kysed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honoure hir father and moether in lawe, to loue hir husbände, to rule well his hussholde, to kepe his house in good ordre, and to shew his self faultlesse.

The XL Chapter.

Now as they were goinge homeward againe, vpon y xi. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye towarde Nin.ue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therefore yf it please the, we two wyll go before, and let the hussholde with thy wife and y catell come soft & sayrly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon y toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

B And whyle she was waytinge there for his cōmyng, she looked a farre of, and anone

The xi. Chap. Ho. xxiij.

she perceaued his sonne cōmyng. and ranne and tolde his husbände, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth. And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou cōmest in to the house, immediatly worshipe the LORDE thy God, and geue thankes vnto him: then go to thy father, and kysse him, & strake his eyes ouer w the gall of y fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messenger, and wagged with his taylor for gladnesse.

So y blynde father arose, and beganne to remie, and stembled with his fete, and gaue a seruaunt his hande, ranne to meete his sonne, receaued him, and kysed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped & thanked God, they sat downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taried half an heure, and then beganne the blemyshe to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte skynne of an egge: which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

Then they praysed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thankes, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seven dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all y housholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Tlatath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, & reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so for y space of seven dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerych one.

The XII. Chapter.

Then Tobias called his sonne vnto him & sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he droue the euell spiete from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to his father and mother: he deliuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish, he hath made the to see the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greate good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him, to see him asyde, and beganne to praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them: Prayse ye God of heauen, and geue thankes vnto him before all men lyuynge, for he hath shewed his mercy vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secretes, but to shew and to prayse ye workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fastynge, and to geue almes is better, then to hoorde vptreasures of golde. For almes deliuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to synde euerlastinge life. But they that do synne and vnrightheadnes, are ye enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherfore I tell you the trueth, and wyll hyde nothynge from you. Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and lefcest thy dyner, and hyddest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offred thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the, and to deliuer Sara ye sonnes wyfe from the euell spiete. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seuen that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were soie afraied, and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces vnto the ground. Then sayde the angell: Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene wth you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thankes vnto him.

E Non thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sente of men.

Now therfore is ye tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his wonderous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes, he was taken awaye out of their sight, so ye they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of thre

The xiiij. Chap.

houres, and praysed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wonderous workes.

Then XIII. Chapter.

Then olde Tobias opened his mouth, and praysed the LORDE and sayde: Greate art thou O LORDE for evermore, and thy Kyngdome wolde without ende: for thou scourgest and healest, thou leddest vnto hell, and bryngeest out agayne, and there is none ye maye escape thy hande. O geue thankes vnto ye LORDE ye children, of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the heiche. For amonge the heichen which knowe him not hath he scatred you, to the intent that ye shulde shew forth his marvelous workes: and cause them for to knowe, that there is none other God allmightie but he. He hath chastened vs for oure mysdedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Considre then, how he hath dealt wth you, and prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euerlastinge Kyng in ye workes.

I wil prayse him enen in the londe of my captiuite, for he hath shewed his maiesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therfore O ye synners, and do righteousness before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me and my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. O Jerusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punished the for the workes of thine owne handes. O prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, and geue thankes to the euerlastinge God, that he maye builde vphis tabernacle agayne in ye, that he maye call agayne vnto the, all such as be in captiuite, and that thou mayest haue ioye for evermore. With a sayre light shalt thou shyne, and all ye endes of ye wolde shal honoure the. The people shal come vnto the from farre, they shal brynge giftes, and worshippe ye LORDE in the, and thy londe shal they haue for a Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the grea te name in the.

Cursed shal they be that despysse the, and all they that blasphemethe, shal be condepned: but blessed shal they be, ye buylde the vp. As for the, thou shalt reioyse in ye childre, for they all shal be blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all ye lone ye, and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE O my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath deliuered his cite Jerusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counthe myself happie, yf my sede remaine to see ye cleaunes of Jerusalem.

The booke of Tobias.

Apo 21. c The gates of Jerusalem shalbe buylded with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the cōpase of hir walles with precious stones. All hir stretes shalbe paved wth whyte marble stone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sung. Praise be y^e LORDE, which hath exalted her, & his Kyngdome maye be vpon her for evermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkyng.

The XIII. Chapter.

After that Tobias had gotte his sight agayne, he lyued two and xl. yeres, & sawe his childers children. Now whan he was an hundred and two yere olde, he dyed, & was buried honorably in Ninive. For whan he was sire and sistre yeares of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was thre score yere olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, & departed in peace.

But in y^e houre of his death he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & seven yonge spirit galdes his sonnes children, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Ninive is at hande, for the worde of the LORDE can not fayle, and oure bretheren that are scatred out of the lande of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole lande of it that hath bene waiste, shalbe fylled: and the house of God that was bient in it, shalbe buylded againe, & all soch as feare God shal retorne thither: the heithen also shal forsake their Idols, & come to Jerusalem, and dwell th^{er}, and all the Kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshippe the LORDE God of Israel.

C And therfore my children, heare youre father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness, sette after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre children & they do right, geue almes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in truely and with all their power. Heare me therfore my childre, and abyde not here: but in what daye so euer ye haue buried youre mother besyde me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal brynge it to destruccion and ende.

D After y^e death of his mother, Tobias departed awaye from Ninive, with his wife and children, and with his childers children, & came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of the. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fift generation and childers childre. And whan he was xcij. yea-

re of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynnsfolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued & accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the lande.

Chap. XIII. Judith seeth oportune, prayeth vnto God for strenght, smytereth of the heade of Olofernes, and bryngeth it in to the cite, where the people reioyse and prayse God.

Chap. XIII. Olofernes heade is shewed vpon the walles, the children of Israel fall vpon their enemies, which take their flight. Achior cometh in to the nombre of the people of God.

Chap. XV. Olofernes hoost are out of their wyrtes after his death, the Israelites folowe vpon the, the other cities of Israel helpe them, they wyne greate spoyle, & comede Judith.

Chap. XVI. Judith syngeth prayse vnto the LORD. The people come together vnto Ierusalem to geue thankes and prayse vnto the LORD how Judith made hit ende.

The first Chapter.

Arphaxat the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, & buylded a noble ströge cite, which he called Ecbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuētie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But vpon the foure corners every syde was twentie fore brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charetes.

So in y twelfe years of his raigne it hapened, that Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assyrians (which raigned in the greate cite of Ninive) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and overcame hi in y greate felde called Ragau, lesyde Euphrates and Tigris and Tadalon in the fildes of Erioch the kynge of the Elites.

Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celiicia, in Damascen, in Libanus, and vnto the heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Esdras, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Jordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of Jesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all the se byd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of y Assyrians sende messaungers. But they all w ere consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne empte, and put the awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciō at all these londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The II. Chapter.

In the xiiij. yeare of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of y first moneth, it was denyssed in the courte

The ij. Chap.

of Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assyria, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all y elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secreete counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his dominion. Now whan they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kynge called Olofernes the chiefe captaine of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despy sed my commaundement. Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Olofernes cal'ed together all the captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assyria, and mustred the souldyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twetye thousande fightinge men vpon foce, and twelue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oren, and small catell, and y without nombre. He caused come to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Much golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, hoismen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lande, like the gres-hoppers.

And whan he was gone past the borders of the Assyrians, he came towarde the greate mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celiicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne enery ströge holde. As for y welchy cite of Melothus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childre of Tharsis and the Ismaelites, which laye towarde the wylbernes and vpon the south syde of y londe of Chelon. He wente euer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there, from the broke of Mambretyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celiicia vnto the coastes of Japhet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goedes: & who so ever withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente berne in to the felde of Damascen in the tyme of harvest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in y earth

The III. Chapter.

A So the kynges & prynces of all cities & londes sent their Embassitours: namely, they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal & Lybia & Celicia, which came to Holofernes, & sayde: Let thy wiath ceasse towarde vs: It is better for vs to serue the greates kyng Nabuchodonosor with our lynes, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All our cities and possessions, all mountaynes and hilles, all felde, greace and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all our goodes and householdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subiection be it altogether. We our selues also and our children wylbe thyne owne, come vnto vs a peccable lorde, and vse our seruyce at thy pleasure.

B Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemen & greace power, and conquered all stronge fenced cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, & such as were mete for y warre, to helpe him. There came soch a feare also vpon those countrees, that the dwellers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers & the people together, were forth to meet him as he came, & receaued him honorably with garlandes & torches, with daunces, tabrettes and pipes.

C Nevertheless though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomack: but he destroyed their cities, & hewed downe their woddes. For Nabuchodonosor the kyng had commaunded him, that he shulde rote out all the goddes of the londe: to y intent that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nacions which Holofernes with his power brought vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Idumeans in the lode of Gabaa and Sepropoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherein he caused all the whole multitude of his hoost to be gathered together.

The III. Chapter.

A When the children of Israel y dwelt in Jewry herde this, they were sore afrayed of him. There came soch tremblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Jerusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities & their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria rounde aboute vnto Jericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared come for them agaynst the battayll.

Eliachim also y prest wrote vnto all the that dwelt towarde Efdrelon (which lyeth ouer agaynst y greace felde by Dotha Im) & vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, & herby the remight be enywaye and passage to Jerusalem, & y they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixte y mountaynes. And the children of Israel dyd, as Eliachim the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the aulter of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one acorde cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their children shulde not be geuen into a pray, and their wyues into a spoyle, y their cities shulde not be layed waist, & y their Sanctuary shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the heithen.

Then Eliachim the hye prest of the LORDE wente rounde aboute all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, y the LORDE wil heare youre petitions, yf ye cotynne stedfast in fastinges and prayers in y sight of the LORDE. Remembre Moses the seruante of the LORDE, which ouerthrew y Amalechites (that trusted in their might & power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charrettes & horsmen) not with weapons, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer before the LORDE: In so moch that they which offred brient sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offred the offunges vnto y LORDE, beyng arayed in hayrie clothes, and had asshes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, y he wolde vyset his people of Israel.

The V. Chapter.

A When worde came to Holofernes the prynce of the warres of the Assyriās, y the childre of Israel prepared themselves to make resistance, & how they had stopped the wayes betwixte the mountaynes. Then was he excedinge wroth, & called all the prynces of Moab, & the captaines of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, y^e keperch in the mountaynes? Or what maner of cities are they? What is their power? Or what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their capteyne? And why do they despise vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to meete vs, y^e they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the capteyne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the truerh before the concernynge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

This people is of the generacion of the Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe y^e goddes of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, z so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddes) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a verch in to y^e whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, z there they dwelt foure hundred yeares, in y^e which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the kynge of Egipte oppressid them, and subdued the in buyldinge of his cities with ma^{te} kynge of claye z brack, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punyshed the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plagues.

Now whan the kynge of Egipte let the go their waye, z the plague ceased, z then followed after the, to take the, z to bringe the agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened y^e see, so y^e the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, z these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod, In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egiptians followed vpon them, they were so ouerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell the that came after, how it happened.

So whan this people was passed therow the reed see, they came in to the wildernes of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, z where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. There were y^e hytter waters made swete for the, that they might drynke, z xl. yeares had they meate from heauē. Where so ever they wente (without bowe z arrowe, without butler or swerde) their God fought for the, z caused the to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, except it were so, y^e they departed vnfaichfully from y^e worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped eny other besydet heir God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyled, to be slayne, z to be put to confusion. Neuertheles as oft as they were sory for departynge from the worshiipe of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power z strenght to withstode their enemies.

Moreover they slew the kynge of the Canaanites, Jebusites, Pherezites, Ehitites, Euites z Amorites, z all y^e mightie in Hesebon, z toke their lodes z cities in possession: and so longe as they synned not in y^e sight of their God, it were well with them, for their God hateth vnrightheousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of y^e waye, which God had geuen them, y^e they shulde walke in it, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, z many of them were caried awaye prisoners into a straunge countre. But now lately they haue turned the selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, z are come together agayne out of the countrees where they were scattered abrode: and thus haue they coquered these mountaynes z dwell therein: z as for Jerusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it agayne in possession.

And therefore my lord, make diligēt inquisition, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doubtles their God shal deliuer them into thy handes, z subdue them vnto y^e power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstande them, for their God shal defende the, z so shal we be a shame to all y^e worlde.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, z thought to slaye him, z sayde one to another: what is he this, which darre saie, y^e y^e childre of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kynge z his hoost? where as they are an vnwarned people, without strenght or vnderstodunge of y^e fettes of warre? That Achior therefore maye knowe, y^e he hath disceined vs, we wil go vp in to y^e mountaynes: z whan the mightie men of the are taken, he also shal be stucke with the swerde, y^e all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The VI. Chapter.

Whan they had lest of speakinge, Holofernes toke sere indignacion, z sayde vnto Achior. For so moch as thou hast prophesied vnto vs, sayenge that the people of Israel shal be defended of their

I God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. For when we slay them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shall be destroyed with the, & thou shalt see, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORD of the whole earth. Thou shalt the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow yf sydes, & thou shalt fall downe straight amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be utterly destroyed with the. But yf thou thynkest thy prophecy to be true, why dost thou then chaunge thy colour? why art thou afayed? Thynkest thou that my wordes are not able to be performed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt see these thinges with the, beholde, from this houre forth wyll I sende the vnto yonder people, that when the punishment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserved) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punished with them.

So Holofernes commaunded his seruantes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to deliuer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruantes toke him, & were thorow the playne felde. But when they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the slynge casters came out agaynst them: Nevertheless they gat them away by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achior hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their loide.

Now withstandinge the children of Israel wente downe fro Bethulia, came vnto him, lowsed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and asked him what the matter was, that the Assirians had left him bounde.

E Osias the sonne of Micha of the trybe of Symeon, & Charnum (which is also called Gothoniell) were the principall rulers at the same tyme. Now when Achior stode in the myddest of the Senators, & before the all, he tolde them, what answer he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he asked him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroth, & commaunded him for the same cause to be deliuered vnto yf Israelites: that when he overcame the childre of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And when Achior had playnely tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe

vpon their faces, prayinge the LORD, and poured on: their prayers together vnto the LORD, with a generall complaynte & wepyng, & sayde: O LORD God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon ourre lowlynnes, & considre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, yf thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how yf thou bringest the lowe, yf presume of the seanes, & make their boast in their owne strength. So when the wepinge and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they coforted Achior, sayenge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strength thou hast praysed, shall so rewarde the, yf thou shalt rather see their destruccion. When yf LORD of God then shall geue his seruantes this libertie, God be with the also amonge vs: so yf it please yf, thou wylthynne mayest dwell w vs.

Now when Osias had ended the counsell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refreshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The VII. Chapter.

The next daye Holofernes commaunded his hoost, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were an C. & xx. thousande figheinge men on fote, & two & twentie thousande horsmen, besyde the preparinge of them yf were womne, & came to them on euery syde out of the countrees & cities which he had takē. All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyll syde, vnto the topp that looketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Belma, vnto Chelmon yf lyeth towarde Esdrelon.

Now when the childre of Israel sawe so greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon yf grounde, strowed asches vpon their heades, & prayed w one a corde, yf the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapons, & sat betwixt the mountaynes in yf narrow place, & kepte the waye daye & night. But whyle Holofernes was goinge aboute, he founde the water sprunge, which from the south syde was conveyed in to the cite by a condyre: this commaunded he to be directe another waye, & to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they used secretly, more for pleasure then for necessity.

E Then wente the Ammonites & the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust nether in speare ner arrowe, but haue taken in, and kepte the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest overcome them therfore without y^e strykyng of any battayll, sett me to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye the without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wōne, for so moch as it lieth in the moūtaines. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he set an hundred men at euery well reunde aboute.

Exo. 17. a

D And whan this watch had endured twenety dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, fayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in y^e whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osias, and sayde all with one voyce: God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kynge of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirst and greate destruction. Therfore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto y^e people of Holofernes: for better it is y^e we be captiue and prayse the LORD with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughd to scorne & shamed of euery man whan we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen & earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which punyssheth vs accordinge to the deservynge of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, y^e ye geue vp the cite now in to y^e power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

Whan they had spokē out these wordes, there was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voice, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou y^e art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punyssh oure vnrightheousnes with thine owne scour

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tungen, Osias stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: O take good hertes vnto you (deare brethren) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORD: peradventure he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

Judit. 9. b

The viij. Chapter.

It happened whan these wordes came to the eares of Iudith a wydow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Jor, the sonne of Joseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, y^e sonne of Jannoi, the sonne of Jedeon, the sonne of Raphoi, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchia, the sonne of Euan, y^e sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, y^e sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir husbände was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye harvest. For whyle he was byndinge y^e sheeues together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Iudith his desolate wyddow thre yeaeres & six monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made hirself a preuy chambere, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hir maydes. She ware a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones & the solempne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hir husbände also had left her greate riches, a plentiful householde, greate vnmeneable possessions and many catel. This Iudith was a woman of a very good repute with euery one, for she feared the LORD greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell worde of her.

Whan this Iudith herde, how Osias had promised the people, that after the fyfthe daye he wolde geue vp y^e cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chambr and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherein Osias hath consented, y^e yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempte the

The boke of Judith.

LORDE: This denyce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of y^e LORDE a tyme, z appoynte him a daye after you re wyll?

C Nevertheless for so moch as the LORDE is pacient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouringe out teares, and besetynge him of grace. For God threateneth not as a mā, neither wyll he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therfore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a meke spiete, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs accordinge to his owne wyll and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, z brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so moch as we folowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which forsake their God, z worshipped other goddes: for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled z brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for whose cause let vs cary with mekenesse. He shall requyre and make inquisition for oure bloude, from the vexacions of oure enemies: he shal brynge downe all the heithen, that rise vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, eue the LORDE oure God.

D Therfore deare brethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all y^e people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondesth, lift vp their hertes with youre exortacion, y^e they maye call to remembraunce, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, y^e they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remembre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was Isaac, so was Jacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were founde stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaued not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put the selues forth with vnpaciency and murmuringe agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therfore shulden not we undertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to consider, that all these punysshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes z mysdedes: Belcynge also, that this correccion cometh vnto vs (as to the seruautes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruccion.

The ix. Chap. Ho. xxvij.

Then sayde Osias z the elders vnto Judith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no mā can reprove y^e wordes. Praye thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy womā, and fearest God. And Judith sayde vnto them: Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and deuice, yf it be of God: and beseeke God, that he wyll brynge my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I denyed: Ye shal stode this night before the porte, and I wyll go forth with Abia my mayde: Praye ye therfore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remembre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, are ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osias the pryncce of the people of Iuda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

The IX. Chapter.

Now whā they were gone their way, Judith wente into hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed ashes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my father Symeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that used violence and wilfulnes, and that rauyshed y^e virgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wines in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuite, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruautes, which bare a zeale vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseeke y^e. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnynge, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and denyed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, z thy iudgmentes are done in thy everlastinge fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hoost of the Egipcians, whan they beyngeweapened, persecuted thy seruautes, z put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokest vpon their hoost, castinge a thicke darcknes before them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters overwhelmed them.

Eue so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in y^e power and multitude of their men

O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from y begynnyng, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, y they wyl vnhalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waiste the tabernacle of y name, and to cast downe the horne of thine altier with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) y the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and y thou mayest synce him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strengch, and that I maye destroye him.

C This shal brynge thy name an euerlasting remembraunce, yf the hande of a woman ouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondech not in y power of men, nether hast thou eny pleasure in the strengch of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and meke hath thy pleasure bene euermore.

The X. Chapter.

Judith whan she had lest of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed y hayrie cloth from her, put of the garmentes of hir widowhode, washed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and placed hir hayrie, sett an hooe vpon hir heade, and put on soch apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armelettes, spanges, earynges, synger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best araye.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beneye and faynesse (for all this decking of hir self was not done for eny voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therfore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so y she was exceedinge amiable and wel fauoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bried & chese, and wente hir waye.

B Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Ofias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, & marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of our fathers geue y his grace, and with his power persourne all the deuycce of thy hert: that Jerusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy & righteous. And all they y were there, sayde wth one voyce: so be it, so be it. Judith made hir prayer vnto y LORDE, & wente out at y porte, she & hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spyces of y Assirians met wth her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of y Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shal be geue vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scome to yelde the selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in youre sight. Therfore haue I denyed by my self after this maner: I wyll go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyll shew him, how he maye come by them, and wyne them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

And whan these men had herde hir wordes, & considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) & sayde vnto her: Thou hast saued y life by fyndinge out this deuycce, y thou woldest come downe to o^r lorde: & be thou sure, that whā thou comest vnto him, he shal intreate the well, & thou shalt please him at y hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes paulyon, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was overcome & taken with hir bewtye. Then saide his seruantes: who wolde despyse y people of y Jewes, y haue so fayre womē? Shal we not by reason fight against the for the se? So whā Judith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, y was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she looked fast vpo him, & fell downe vpo the earth. And Holofernes seruantes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The XL. Chapter.

A Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wol de serue Nabuchodonosor the Kyng. As for thy people, yf they had not despyed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst the. But tell me now, what is the cause & thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Judith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after & wordes of thy handmayden, the LORDE shall brynge thyn matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe lyueth, & as truly as his power lyueth, which is in the to the punysshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the bestes also of & felde. For all people speake of thy prouident curye, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commended in all londes.

Judith. 5. a. The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaundedst to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl deliuer them ouer vnto the enemye. And for so much as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afrayed of the. They suffre greate hunger also, & for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Morouer, they are appoynted to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbyddē the to touch) for come, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, & they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto &, to shew the these thinges. For I thy handmayden worshipec God even here now besyde the, and thy handmayden shal go forth, and I wil make my prayer vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl rewarde the their synne: then shal I come and shew the, & brynge the thorow the myddest of Jerusalem, so that thou shalt haue all & people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so moch as one dogg bark agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouidence of God: and for so moch as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruantes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman vpon earth, in lewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so moch as & promyse is good, yf thy God perfourme it vnto me, he shall be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The XLII. Chapter.

Then commaunded he her to go in, where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellinge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her fro his table. Judith answered him, and sayde: As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: As the se thinges that thou hast brought with the sayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Judith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shal not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuysed.

So his seruantes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appointed. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might haue leue to go forth by night & before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wote forth into the valley of Bethulia, and washed herself in the wellwater. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prosper hir waye, for the deliuerance of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenynge.

Vpon & fourth daye it happened, & Holofernes made a cosily supper vnto his seruantes, and sayde vnto Vagao his chamberlay-ne: So y waye, and counsell this hebinesse, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to scorne, that she were come from him vnnedled withall.

Then wente Vagao vnto Judith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afrayed, to come in to my lord, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Judith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lordenaye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

D So she stode vp, and deckte herself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he bient in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and syt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Judith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, then euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery w her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The XIII. Chapter.

A When it was late in the night, his seruantes made haist, every mā to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber doores, and wente his waye, for they were all overladen with wyne. So was Judith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkenies fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Judith hir mayden, to stode without before the dore, and to wayte. And Judith stode before the bed, makinge hir prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strengthen me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Jerusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye persourne the thinge, which I haue denyed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

B And when she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lowsed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his hea-

de, and sayde: Strengthen me O LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and delyuered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Judith cried a farre of vnto y watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And when they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle & greate, yonge & olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir euerychone: but she wente vp in to an hye place, and caused sylence to be proclaimed.

When everyman now helde his tonge, C Judith sayde: O prayse the LORDE oure God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath persourmed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assirians, and this is the canapy, wherein he laye in his dronkenies: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyneth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remainynge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynges of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: & y with greate victory, so that I am escaped, and ye delyuered. O geue thankes vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.

So they praysed the LORDE alltogether, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought oure enemies to naught.

And Ozias y chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hyc God, aboue all women vpon earth.

The booke of Judith.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded þ a right to wounde and to synye of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy thyne owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguyshe and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God

Amen.

J Achior also was called, & he came. Then sayde Judith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whō thou gauest wytnes, that he wol-de be auenged of his enemies, even he hath this night thorow my hande synyete of the mayest se that it so is, beholde, this is þ hea-de of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened þ with destruction, sayenge: whan the people of Israel is take,

The XIII. Chapter.

J Judith saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Strete vp this hea-de vpon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take eueryman his weapen, and fall out violently: not as though ye wol-de go besyde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyes in the tētes se this, they shall of necessity be cōpelled to fle backward, and to rayse vp their captay-ne to the battayll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes panylion, and fynde

the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fear-fulnes shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceave that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shall deliuer them vnto yon, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seyng the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge
the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they strickte vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapen, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyas sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tēt, came before his chamber, and made a greate russheinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him.
For there durst not one of the Assirians knoe
ke, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chiefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the mysse are crepte out of their holes, and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber,
stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Judith.

But whā he had hertened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceave no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lifte it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltered in his bloude vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Judiths tent, and found de her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womā of þ Jewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame. For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpo the greunde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chiefe of the assirians hoost her-de that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpo
them, so þ they: myndes were sore afrayed.
And there was an excedynge greate crye
in the whole hoost.

Now whan all the hoost herde that

Holofernes was headed, their mynde and counsell seel from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they undertooke to defende themselves by flyenge away: one spake not to another, but hang'd downe their heades, lest all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrewes: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapons, and so they fled by the wayes of the feloes, and thorow all the fore pathes of the dales.

And whan 3 children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with trōpettes, blowinge and makinge a greate crie after thē. As for the Assirians, they had no ordie, and kepte not themselves together, but fled their waye. Nevertheless the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordie, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messengers vnto all the cities and countrees of Israel.

B So all the regions and every cite sent out their best men after them in harnesse, & smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to 3 utmost parte of their borders. And whether that were in Bethul. a came into the tentes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nobie of the catell, and of all costly Jewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Joachim the hye prest at Jerusalem, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Judith.

E Now whan she came out vnto them, they beganne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayinge: thou worshippe of the cite of Jerusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou hono of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy heart is comforted, because thou hast loved cleynnes and chastyte, & hast knowne no man but thine owne husbande: therefore hath the hande of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be forever. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyles of the Assirians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clethinge and all ornaments) they gaue it vnto Judith. And all the people reioysed, both men, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The XVI. Chapter.

Then sang Judith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O synge vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuyng, beioyfull and call vpon his name. It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might deliuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, and their horses covered the valleys. He purposed to haue breet vp my londe, and to slaye my yongemen with the swerde.

He wolde haue carryed awaye my children and virgins into captiuyte, but the almighty LORDE hurte him, and delyned him into the handes of a woman, which brought him to confusion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Eitan that slew him, neither haue the greate giannes sett themselves agaynst him: but Judith the daughter of Merari & hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. For she layed a waie hir widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an hooe, to begyle him. Hir slippers rauyshe his eyes, hir bewtye captynated his mynde, with the sweete smere she of his neck. The Persians were astonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of 3 Assirians, when my symple appeared, drey of chyrise. The sonnes of the daughters haue pearced them thorew, and slayne them as fugityue childre: they peryshe in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let vs synge a songe of thankesgeuyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we synge vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouerceme. All thy creatures shal de serue the, for thou spakest but the worde, & they were made: thou sente thy sperte, & they were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundations with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like ware. But they that feare the, shal be greate with 3 in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp agaynst my generacion, for the almighty

D After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Jerusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promised offerynges. And Judith offred all Holofernes weapons, and all the Jewels, that y people had geue her, and the canapy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vp vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: & this ioye by reason of the victory, with Judith, endured thie monethes.

Gen. 30. b

So after these dayes every man wente home agayne, and Judith was in greate reputation at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so y after hir husbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worship. She dwelt in hir husbandes house an hundred and fyne yeare, & left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried besyde hir husbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seven dayes. So longe as she lyled, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherein this victory was gotten, was solemply holden, and rekened of the Jewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Jewes euersence, vnto this daye.

The XI. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is describied the dreame of Mardocheus.

Mardocheus the sonne of Jair, the sonne of Semei, y sonne of Cisei of y crybe of Ben Jamin a Jew: which had his dwell lyng in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, & excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges courte (Neuerthelesse he was one of the prisoners, whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilō had caried a waye from Jerusalem vnto Babilon w Jechonias the kyng of Juda.) In the seconde yeare of the raig ne of greate Artaxerxes in the first daye of y moneth Nisan, had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: he thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, & greate vpro in y londe: & y he sawe two greate dragons, ready to fight one agaisf another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all heithen were vp, to fight agaynst y righteous people. And y same daye was full of darcknes & very vncleare, full of trouble & anguysh, yee a greate fearfulness was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared y plage & euell y was deuysed ouer thē, & were at a poynte w them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greater ryuer & in to many waters. And with y it was daye, & the sonne rose vp agayne. And y lowly were exalted, and deuoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desyred to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntyll the night.

The XII. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus uttereth the treason of the two seruantes agaynst the kyng, and therefore doth the kyng reward him.

In the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell handes vpon the kyng Artaxerxes: and so he certified the kyng therof. Then caused the kyng to examen y two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had granted it, they were put to death.

Hest. 2. d
and 5. a

This the kyng caused to be put in y Cronicles for an euerlastinge remembraunce, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kyng commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the courte, and for this faithfulness of his, he gave him a reward. But Aman the sonne of Amadath the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges courte,

Hest. 1. a
and 16. a

The greates kynge Artaxerxes which raigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and seven and twētye londes, sendeth his frendly salutation vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his deminion. Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed to equyte allwaye and gentylnes, to gouernethose that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholly to set them in a peaceable life, and thereby to brynge my Kingdome vnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on every syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my councelers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellēt in wysdome, whose good wyll, tyneth & faithfulness hath oft bene shewed & proued (which was also a pryncipall & next vnto me) Amā by name, which certified vs, how in all lodes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, & made statutes & lawes agaynst all other people, & haue allwaye despysed the proclaimed commaundementes of kynge: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that such rule shulde continue by you & not to be put downe. Semge now we perceane the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, & withstandinge oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure Kingdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therfore haue we commaunded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordered and set ouer all oure busynesse, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues & children be destroyed and rotd out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: & there shalbe no mercy shewed, & no man spared. And this shalbe done the xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar of this yere, that they which of olde (and now also) haue ener bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intent that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranquylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the workes and noble actes of the LORD, & made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORD, thou valeaunt and almighty kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer Israel, there is no mā that can withstode ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen & earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORD of all thinges, and there is no man, that can resist the LORD) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORD, that it was neither of malice, ner presumption, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipe yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene content, and with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel eny good, to haue kyst eue his footes) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not lett the honoure of a mā in the steade of the glorye of God, and because I wolde worshipe none but onely the my LORD. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

And therfore O LORD then God and Kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they ymagyn how they maye bunge vnto naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to enerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine inheritaunce of olde. O despise not thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered & brought out of Egypte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto my people, who then hast chesen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyue O LORD, and prayse thy name. O LORD, suffre not y mouths of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All the people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORD, for their death and destruction stode before their eyes.

The XIII. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of queene Hester.

Queene Hester also beyng in the battayll of death, resorted vnto the LORD, layed awaye hir gloriouse apparell, and put on the garmētes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the steade of precious oyntment, she scatred ashes and dōge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe. All the places where she was wont to haue ioye asofore, those fylled she with haye, & she placē out himself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

Deut. 4. c
and 7. d

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but y, for my misery and destruction is harde at my hande. Fro my youth vp I haue herde out of the kynred of my facher, that thou tokest Israel from amonge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritance, and loke what thou didest promise the, thou hast made it good vnto the.

1ere. 11. c

Now well LORDE, we haue synned before the, therefore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Neuertheles it satisfieth the not, that we are in bytter and heny captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed their hondes vpon the hondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordeined and appoynted: to destroye thyne inheritance, to shut and to stoppe y mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshippe of thy house and thine aulter, and to open the mouthes of the heithen, y they maye prayse the power z vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshy kynge for ever.

Exo. 4. c
1ere. 1. a

O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto the that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorne in oure misery and fall: but turne their vauyce vpo them selues, and punysh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Thinke vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in y tyme of oure distress and of oure trouble. Strengthen me O thou kynge of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquent and pleasaunt speach in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to y hate of oure enemye, to destroye him, and all soch as consent vnto him. But deliuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely y LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshippe of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncircumcyded and of all heithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessity, y I hate the token of my piecmyence z worshippe, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, z that I abhorre it as an vncleane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyet and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amāns table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynk offerings, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens y daie that I was brought hither vnto this daie: but onely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abrahā, O thou mightie God aboue all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and deliuer vs out of the hande of y wicked, z deliuer me out of my feare.

The XV. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heny hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

It d vpon y thirde daie it happened, A that Hester layd awaye y mournynge garmētes, and put on hir glouous apparell, and decke herself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder z Sauoure of all thinges) toke two maydes w her: vpon the one she leaned herself, as one y was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose colour red. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amiable, but hir hert was sorowfull for greate feare. She wente in thorow all the doores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly araye, all of golde, and sett w precious stones, and he was very terryble. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and looked grynly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leaned hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

Neuertheles God turned y kynges mynde, B that he was gentle, that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, z helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her louynge wordes also, z sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am y brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. The sayde she: I sawe the (Olorde) as an angell of God, z my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (Olorde) and thy face is full of amyte. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was a frayed, and all his seruantes comforted her.

The XVI. Chapter.

A cōpye of the commaundement, which King Artaxerxes caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Jewes.

A The greate kynge Artaxerxes, which raigneth fro India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces & rulers of the same londes, soch as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondrye friendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshippe, be ever y more proude and hye mynded, and undertake not onely to hurte our subiectes (for plentiful benefites maye they not suffre, and be gynn to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnto fulnes awaye from men) but in pryde and presumption (as they that be runnyde full and vnto full for the good detes) they go about to escape the iudgment of God, yf seych all thinges, which (iudgment hateth & punyssheth all wickednes. It happeneth of also, yf they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are comytted to be handled, were proude, and defyle the selues with sheddyng of innocent bloude, which bringeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceitfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceane and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

Now is it profitable and good, that we take heede, make search therafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vn honest, and noy some thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before our eyes: and thereby to beware in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyet & peaceable for all men, and that wenght some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for yf thinge that now is present before our eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

Hester 1. a What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu yf Macedonyn (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from our goodnes) was come in amonge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the friendship that we beare toward all people, so that he was called our father, and had in hye honoure of euery man, as the next and prynci-

pal vnto the kynge, he coude not forbear him self from his pryde, hath undertaken not onely to robbe vs of the kyngdome, but of oure life.

With manyfolde disceate also hath he besyred to destroye Mardochus our helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of our kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had takē them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto the of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Jewes (which were accused of yf wicked, yf they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & right lawes, and that they be the children of the most hye luyng God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and our progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherefore, as for the letters and commaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effect: for he that set them vp and inuented the, hangerh at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deservynge.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Jewes maye frely and without hinderaunce holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpon yf xij. daye of yf xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguysh and trouble wolde haue oppressed the. For the God that governeth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye wher in yf chosen people shulde haue perished.

Moreover, amonge the hye solmpne dayes that ye haue, ye shal holde this daye also w all gladnesse: hat now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraunce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruction to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lodes that do not this, shal horribly perishe and be destroyed w the swerde and fyre, and shal not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also

of yf wilde beastes & foules.

The first. Chap. Ho. xxxij.

The first Chapter.

Set youre affeccion vpo wysdome, ye that be iudges of the earth. Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, & seke him in the synglenesse of hert. For he will be fōnde of them that tempte him not, and appeareth vnto soch as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be allowed) refourmeth & vnwyse. And why? wysdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fayned nurture, & with draweth himself fro y thoughtes that are without vnderstandinge: & where wickednes hath the vpper hāde, he flieth from thence. For the spere of wysdome is lonyng, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witnesse of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. For the spere of y LORDE fylleth the rounde compass of the worlde, and y same that vpholdeh all thinges, hath knowlege also of the voyce.

Therefore he that speaketh vnrighteous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgmēt of reprove. And why? iniquificion shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shal be punyshed. For the eare of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudginges shal not be hydd. Therefore beware of murmuringe, which is no thinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from flānder. For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

O seke not youre owne death in y erroure of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre awne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruction of the luyngge.

For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyng: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue health, that there shulde be no destruccion in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for righteousnesse is euerlasting and immortall, but vnrightheousnesse bringeth death.) Nevertheless, the vngodly call her vnto them both w' wordes & workes, & whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The II. Chapter.

And yf vngodly talke & ymagin thus amonge themselves (but not right:) The tyme of oure life is but shorte & tedious, & when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man yf turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, & we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrils, & yf wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for o' body, it shalbe very asshes yf are quēched, & o' soule shal vanish as yf soft ayre. Oure life shal passe awaye as yf trace of a cloude, & come to naught as yf myst yf is dryū awaye w' the beames of yf Sonne, & put downe w' the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle & litle, & no man shal haue oure workes in remembraunce.

For o' tyme is a very shadow yf passeth awaye, & after o' ende there is no returnyng, for it is fast sealed, so yf no mā cometh agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye yf pleasures yf there are, & let vs soone vse yf creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues w' good wyne & oyntment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne o' selues w' roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but o' lust shal go thorow it. Let every one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leane some to ken of o' pleasure in every place, for yf is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppress the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regard yf heades yf are gray for age. Let yf lane of vnrightheousnesse be oure auctorite, for yf thinge yf is feble is nothinge worth. Therfore let vs defraude the righteous, & why he is not for o' profit, yee he is cleane contrary to o' doinges. He cheketh vs for offendynge agaynst yf lawe, & slaundrieth vs as transgressours of all nurto'. He maketh his boost to haue yf knowlege of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of oure thoughtes: It greuerh vs also to loke vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashon. He counteth vs but vayne personnes, he w' draweth him self from o' wayes as from fylthynges: he commendeth greatly yf latter ende of the iust, & maketh his boast yf God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be yf true sonne of God, he will receaue him & deliuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitfull rebuke and tormentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite & proue his paciēce. Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Such thinges do the vngodly ymagin, & go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath blynded them. As for the miseries of God, they vnderstonderhem not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousnesse, ner regarde the worshippe that holy soules shal haue. For God created man to be vndestroyed, yee after the ymage of his awne liknesse made he him. Nevertheless thorow enuy of the deuell came death into the worlde, and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The III. Chapter.

Whether the soules of yf righteous are in yf hande of God, & yf payne of death shal not touch the. In yf sight of the vniuersite they appere to dye, & their ende is takē for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vtter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffre payne before men, yet is their hope full of immortallite. They are punished but in fewe thinges, neuerthelesse in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, & syndeeth the mere for himself: yee as the golde in the fonnace both he trye them, & receaueth them as a brent offeringe, and when yf tyme cometh they shalbe lofed vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes yf renne thorow the rede busshes. They shal iudge the naciōs, & haue dominion ouer yf people, & their LORD shal raigne for euer. They yf put their trust in him, shal vnderstonde the trouth, & sech as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in loue: for his chesen shal haue giftes & peace. But the vngodly shalbe punished acordyng to their awne ymaginaciōs, for they haue despysed the righteous, & forsaken the LORD.

Who so despyseth wysdome & nurto', he is unhappie, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutefull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vndiscrete, and their childre most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather y baren & vndefyled, which hath not knowne the synfull bedd: she shall haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is y gelded, which wth his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be g^uen y speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in y temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour, & the rote of wysdome shall neuer fade awaye. As for y childre of aduocaters, they shal come to an ende & the seide of an vnrighteous bedd shal be roted out. And though they lyue longe, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, & their last age shalbe without honoure. If they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be sp^onto in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous. The III. Chapter.

Whow fayre is a chaste generacion wth vertue: The memorall therof is immortal, for it is knowne wth God and men. When it is present, m^e take ex^ople thereat: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned & holden in hono^r, & wynneth y rewarde of the vndefyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly childre is vnprofitable, and the thinges y are planted wth whordome, shal take no deperote, ner laye eny fast foundation. Though they be grene in the braunches for a tyme, yet shal they be shak^e wth the wynde: for they stonde not fast, & thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnperfected braunches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eat, yee mete for nothinge. And why? all the children y are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wickednesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken wth death, yet shal he be in rest.

Age is an honorable thinge: neuertheles it stondeth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vndefyled li fe is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued am^oge synners, he traⁿslated him. Yee sodely was he taken awaye, to the intent y wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstodinge, & y hypocrisye shulde not beayle his soule. For y craftie bewitchinge of lyes make good thinges darck, y vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptuous desyre, turne asyde y vnderstodinge of y symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therfore haisted he to take him awaye fr^o amonge y wicked. This the people se, & vnderstonde it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how y y louynge fau^r & mercy of God is vp^o his saintes, & y he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

Thus y righteous y is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are lyminge: & y youth y is soone brought to an ende, y longelife of y vnrighteous. For they se y ende of y wysse, but they vnderstode not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore y LORDE hath taken him awaie. And why? they se him & despise him, therfore shal God also laugh the to scorne: So y they the selues shal dye here after (but without hono^r) yee in shame amonge y deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those y be p^ust vp, & remoue the fr^o y foundations, so y they shalbe laied waist vnto the hyst. They shal mourne, and their memorall shal perishe. So they beynge a frayd shall remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewrayeth^e.

The V. Chapter.

When shal y righteous stonde in grea te stedfastnesse agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely wth the, & take awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed wth horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of y sodane health: groninge for very distresse of mynde, & shal saye within them selues (hauynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguyshe of mynde):

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, & iested vp^o. We foolcs thoughte their life very madnesse, & their ende to be wth out honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therfore we haue erred from the waye of truerth, y light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sone of vnderstodinge rose not vp vp^o vs. We haue weered o^r selues in y waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath o^r pryde done vnto vs? Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger rennyng before: as a shippe y passeth ouer the waves of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, nether y path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde y flyeth thorow y ayre, & no man can se

Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

C Such wordes shal they that haue synned, speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like a drye chistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye wth the wynde: like as thynne scumme is scattered abroad wth the storme: like as is smoke which is dispersed here & there wth the wynde, & as is remembraunce of a strainger fearieth for adaiē, & chē departeth.

Vnto you therfore (O ye kynges) do I speake, is ye maye lerne wysdome and not go amysse: for they is kepe righteousness shalbe righteously iudged: and they is are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answer. Wherefore set yō lust vpon my wordes, & lo neche, so shal ye come by nure. Wysdome is a noble thinge, & neuer saydeth awaie: yee she is easely sente of chē that loue her, & founde of soch as seke her. She preuēteth them is desyre her, is she maye first shewe herself vnto chē. Who is awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no great trauayle, for he shal fynde her syttinge ready at his doores. To thinke vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: & who so watcheth for her, shalbe safe, & that soone. For she goeth aboute, sekynge soch as are meete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, & meteth them wth all diligence. For is vnfained desyre of reformation is hir begynnynge: to care for nure is loue, and loue is the keepinge of hir lawes. Now the keepinge of is lawes is perfeccion & an vncorrupte life, & an vncorrupte life maketh a man familiar wth God. And so the desyre of wysdome ledeth to is kyngdome euerslastinge. If yō delyte be chē in royall seates & cepters (O ye kynges of the people) set youre lust vpon wysdome, is ye maye raigne for euermore. O loue the light of wysdome, all ye is be rulers of the people. As for wysdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I wil tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from is begynnynge of the natiuite, and bringe the knowledge of her in to light, and wil not kepe back the trueth. Neither will I haue to do wth consu mynge enuye, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wysdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kyng is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourture then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good. The VII. Chap.

As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, & syluer shalbe counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboue wel fare & beutie, & purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched. All good thinges came to me w her, & innumerable riches thorow hir hādes. I was glad in thē all, for this wysdome wēte before me, & I knew not þ̄ she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaynedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, & hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue & frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the gistes of wysdome.

God hath graunted me to talke wysly, & conueniēly to hādle the thinges þ̄ he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, þ̄ ledeth vnto wysdome, & teacheth to vse wysdome a right. In his hāde are we & o wordes: yee all o wysdome, o vnderstandinge & knowlege of all o workes. For he hath geue me þ̄ true sciēce of these thinges: so that I knowe how þ̄ worlde was made, & the powers of þ̄ elemētes: þ̄ begynnynge, endinge & myddest of þ̄ tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: þ̄ course of the yeaere: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures & kindes of beastes: the furiousnesse of beastes: the power of þ̄ wyndes: the ymaginacions of mē: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, & all soch thinges as are secrete & not loked for, haue I lerned. For the workmaster of all thinges hath taught me wysdome. For she is þ̄ bieth of þ̄ power of God, & a pure cleane expessinge of þ̄ clearnes of All-mightie God. Therefore can no vndefyled thinge come in to her: for she is þ̄ bryghtnes of þ̄ everlastige light, & vndefiled mynō of þ̄ maiesty of God, & þ̄ ymage of his goodnesse. And for so moch as she is one, she maie do all thinges: & beinge stedfast herself she renueth all, & amōge þ̄ people cōveyeth she herself in to þ̄ holy soules. The VIII. Chapter.

Wysdome reacheth frō one ende to another mightely, & lowigly doth she ordie all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her euē fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligēce to mary myself w her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutie. Who so hath þ̄ cōpany of God, cōmēdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is þ̄ scolemastresse of þ̄ nurtō of God, & þ̄ choser out of his workes. As a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wysdome, & worketh all thinges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstandinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, & worketh more thē wysdome? As a man loue vertue & righteousnes, let him labō for wysdome, for she hath greute vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes & prudence, righteousnes & strēgh, which are soch thinges as mē can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. As a mā desyre moch knowlege, she cā tell þ̄ thinges þ̄ are past, & discerneth thinges for to come: she knoweth þ̄ sotilties of wordes, & cā expōūde darcl'e sentēces. She can tell of tokēs & wōderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, & the endes of all tymes & ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cōpany, & cōmō lowigly w her: no doute she shal geue me good cōūcell, & speake cōfortably vnto me in my carefulnes & grefe. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amōge the cōmōs & lordes of þ̄ cōūcell. whā I speake, they shal loke vpon me: & yf I talke moch, they shal laye their handes vpon their mouth. Moreover, by the meanes of her I shal obtayne immortallite, and leaue behinde me an euerlastinge memoriall, amonge the people that come after me. I shal set my people in ordre, & the nacions shal be subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrantes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amonge the multitude I shal be counted good, & mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest wth her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, & hir fellowship hath no tediousnesse, but myrrour & ioye.

C Now whan I considered these thinges by myself, & pondered them in my hert, how I to be ioyned vnto wysdome is immortallite, & greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how I in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company wth her shal be wysse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute seekinge, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grew to more vnderstandinge, I came to an vnde fyled body. Neuertheless whan I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaste, excepte God gaue it me (& I was a poynte of wysdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The IX. Chapter.

God of my fathers, & LORDE of mercies, (thou I haue made all thinges wth my worde, & ordeyned maner how thy wysdome, I he shulde haue dominion ouer my creature, which thou haue made: I he shulde ordeine I wolde accordinge to equite & righteousness, & execute iudgment wth a true hert) geue me wysdome, which is euer aboute my seate. & put me not out fro amonge my children: for I thy seruant & sonne of my handmayden, am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yōge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amonge the children of men, yet yf thy wysdome be not with him, he shal be nothinge regarded. But thou haue chosen me to be a kynge vnto my people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

Thou haue commaunded me to buylde a temple vpon my holy mount, & an altare in the cite wherin thou dwellest: a likenesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou haue prepared fro the begynnyng, and thy wysdome with me, which knoweth my workes: which also was wth me whan thou maydest my worde, & knew what was acceptable in thy sight, & right in thy commaundementes. O sende her out of thy holy heauens and from the trone of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, & labour with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in thy sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thinges: and she shal lede me soberly in my workes, and preserue me in hir power. So shal my workes be acceptable, & then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, & be worthy to syt in my fathers seate. For what man is he, that maye knowe the counsell of God? Or, who can thinke what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, & oure forecastes are but vncertayne. And why? a mortall and corruptible body is heuy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the vnderstandinge I museth vpon many thinges. Very hardly can we discerne the thinges that are vpon earth, and greates laboure haue we, or we can fynde the thinges which are before oure eyes: Who will then seeke out the groude of the thinges that are done in heauen? Oh LORDE, who can haue knowlege of thy vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wysdome and sende thy holy goost fro aboue: that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: yf men maye lerne my thinges that are pleasaunt vnto the, and be preserued thorow wysdome.

The X. Chapter.

Wysdome preserued my first mā, whō God made a father of the worlde, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the mould of my earth, & gaue him power to rule all thinges. Whan the vnrighteous wente awaye in his wrath from this wysdome, my brother heade perished thorow my wrath of murther. Agayne, whā my water destroyed my whole worlde, wysdome preserued the righteous thorow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Moreover whā wickednes had gotten my vpperhande, so I the nacions were puffed vp with pryde, she knewe my righteous, preserued him faultlesse vnto God, and layed vpon sure mercy for his children. She preserued the righteous, whan he fled from the vngodly I perished, what tyme as my fyre fell downe vpon my cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfructfull, waist and smoking lōde geueth testimony of their wickednesse: yee the vntipe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a tokē of a remembraunce of the vnfaithfull soule, there standeth a pile of salt. For all soch as regarded not wysdome, gat not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thynges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto me, a memoriaill of their foolishnes: so þ in the thynges wherui they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for soch as take hede vnto wysdome, she shal de lyuer them from sorowe.

C When the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, wysdome led him the right waye, shewed him þ kyngdome of God, gaue him knowlege of holy thynges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thynges that he wente aboute. In þ disceatfulness of soch as defrauded him, she stode by him, & made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from þ disceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, þ he might knowe, how that wysdome is stronger then all thynges. When the righteous was sold, she forsoke him not, but deliuered him fro synners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and sayled him not in the bandes: tyll she had brought him the cepter of þ realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyers, & brought hym in to perpetuall worshippe.

D She deliuered the righteous people and faultlesse seide, from the nations that oppressed them. She entred in to the senle of the seruaunt of God, and stode by him in wonders and tokens agaynst the horrible kyng. She gaue þ righteous the rewarde of their labours, & led them forth a marvelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. She brought them thorow the reed see, and caried them thorow the greete water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyle of the vngodly, and praysed thy holy name (o LORD) and magnified thy victorious had with one acorde. For wysdome openeth the mouth of þ dowe, & maketh þ tonges of babes to speake.

The XI. Chapter.
She ordred their workes in the handes of the holy prophet: so þ they wente thorow þ wyldernes þ was not inhabited, & pitched their tetes in þ waiste deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, & were auenged of their aduersaries. Whā they were thirstie, they called vpo þ, & water was geue them out of þ rok, & their thirst slackened out of þ harde stone. For by þ thynges, where thorow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their nete. For vnto the enemies thou gauest mas bloude in steade of luyngge water. And where as they had scarcenesse in þ rebuke whan the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyrist þ was at that tyme, how thou woldest bringe thine awne vnto hend, & slaye their aduersaries.

For whan they were tryed & nouriured w fatherly mercy, they knewleged how the vngodly were indged, and punysched there w wrath of God. These hast thou exorted as a father, & proued the: but vnto þ ether thou hast bene a boysteous kyng, layed hard to their charge, & condēned the. Whether they were absent or present, their punyschment was alyke. For their grese was dubble: namely, meuryngge, and þ remēbraunce of thynges past. But whā they perceaued þ their punyschment dyd the good, they thought vpon the LORD, & wondered at þ ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in þ outcastinge they thought scorn, as of an abiecte. Neuerthelesse þ righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but euenlike as þ thoughtes of þ foolish were, so was also their wickednes. Where as certayne mā now (thou eris) dyd worshipec domme serpentes & wayne beestes, thou sendest a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeance: þ they might knowe, that loke where withall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punysched. For vnto thy allmighty hande, that made the world of naught, it was not ripe ssible, to sende amonge them an heape of Beeres, or woode lyds, or cruell beastes of a strainge kynde, soch as are vnkowne, or spoute fyre, or cast out a smeking breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtingge, but also kyll them with their horrible sight. See without these beestes might they haue bene slayne with one winde, beyng persecuted of their awne workes, and scattered abroad thorow the breth of thy power.

Neuertheles thou hast ordred all thynges in measure, nobre & weight. For thou hast euer had greete strenght & might, & who maye withstode þ power of thine arme? And why like as þ small thyng þ þ balaynce weyeth, so is þ woulde before þ: yee as a droppe of þ morning dew, that falleth dorne vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as though thou sawest not the synnes of me, because they shulde amende. For thou lovest all the thynges that are, and hatest none of thē whō thou hast made: nether didest thou ordeyne or make eny thinge of euell will.

How might eny thinge endure, yf it wer not y will? Or how coude eny thinge be preserved, excepte it were called of y? But thou sparest all, for all are thine, o LORDE, thou lover of soules.

The XII. Chapter.

ALORDE, how gracious & swete is thy sperte in all thinges: Therfore chastenest thou thē measurably that go wroge, and warnest them, concernynge the thinges wherin they offende: thou speakest vnto them (o LORDE) and exortest thē to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde inhabitants of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they comyncted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wytechcraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominacions, myssbeleues & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that y londe which thou lonest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childre of God.

Deut. 9. a

Nevertheless thou sparedest thē also (as mē) & sendest y forerūners of thyne hoost, euē hornettes to destroye thē out by lytle & lytle. Not y thou wast vnable to subdue y vngodly vnto y righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or w one rough worde to destroye thē together: But y mynde was to dryue thē out by lytle & lytle, gevinge thē tyme & place to amende: knowinge well, y it was an vnrightheous nacion & wicked of nature, & y their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursyd seede from y begynnyng, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done y? Or who wyl stōde agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before y face an auēger of vnrightheous mē? Or who wil blame y, yf y people perish, whō thou hast made? For there is none other God but thou, y carest for all thinges: y thou mayest declare how y y iudgmēt is not vnrigh. There darre nether kīge, ner tyraūt in y sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be wyl and louynge: and hast made thy childre to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgest, thou geuest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punysshed, and w soch diligence delyuered y enemies of thy seruātes, which were worthy to dye (where thou w thou gauest thē tyme & place of amēdement y they might turne frō their wickednes) w how greate diligence then punysshest thou thine awne childre, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne & made conenāntes of good promises? So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punysshest y enemies dyuerse wayes: to y intēt y whā we punyssh, we shulde remēbre y goodnesse: & whan we y selues are punysshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

Wherefore where as men haue lyued ignorantly & vnrightheously, thou hast punysshed thē sore, euē thou w y samethinges that they worshipped. For they wente astraye very longe in y waye of errō, & helde y beestes (which euē their enemies despysed) for goddes, lyuynge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therfore hast thou sent a scornefull punysshment amonge them, as amonge the childre of ignorance. As for soch as wolde not be reformed by those scornes & rebukes, they felt the worthy punysshment of God. For y thinges y they suffred, they bare thē vnpaciētly, beinge not contēt in them but vnrwyllynge. And whan they perysched by y samethinge, that they toke for goddes, they knowleged then, that there was but one true God, whom afore they wolde not knowe: therfore came y ends of their dampnacion vpon them.

Nyne are all men, which haue not y knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are sene, knewe not him, that of himself is everlastinge. Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some y course of y starres, some y water, some toke Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heauen which rule y earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes:

yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more sayre he is that made them. For the maker of beuys hath ordered all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of the, they shulde haue perceaued therby, yf he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

B For by the greatnesse & beuys of the creature, yf maker thereof maye playnely be knowne. Notwithstandinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God & wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they were abute in his workes and sought after them, it is a tokē, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes yf are sene: howbeit they are not wholly to be excused. For yf their vnderstandinge and knowlege was so greates, yf they coude discern the worlde and yf creatures, why dyd they not rather fynde out yf LORD thereof?

C But unhappie are they, and amenge the deed is their hope, that call the God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by conyng, the similitude of beastes, or eny wayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. Was whan a carpenter cutteth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the bark of it conyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be vsed, and dightheth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carueth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (acordinge to the knowlege of his conyng) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioeneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he casteth some coloure vpon it. Then maketh he a conuenient tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessity be helped.

D Then goeth he and effreth of his goodes vnto it for his children and for his wife: he seeketh helpe at it, he arerth counsell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it yf hath no soule: for health, he maketh his petition vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: & to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye net go. And in all the thinges yf he taketh in hande (whether it be to cpayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do maner of good.

The XIII. Chapter.

A Gayne, another mā purposinge to say le & begynne to take his iourney thorow yf raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, yf is farre weaker, the yf tre yf beareth him. For as for it, couetousnesse of moneye hath feunde it out, & yf craftes mā made it w his conyng. But yf prouydence (O father) governeth all thinges fro yf begynnynge, for thou hast made a waye in yf see, & a sure path in the myddest of yf wares: declaringe therby, yf thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Cleuerthelesse, yf yf workes of yf wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made: & therfore do men conmytte their lyues to a small pece of wodd passinge ouer the see in a shippe, & are saued.

Gen 6. c

Gen. 7. b

For in the oldetyme also whā the proude gyautes perished, he (in whō the hope was lest to increase yf wolde) wete in to the shippe, which was governed thorow thy hande, & so lest sede behinde him vnto yf worlde. For happie is yf tre wherethorow rightcousnes cometh: but cursed is the ymage of wod, yf is made w hādes, yee both it & he yf made it: he, because he made it: & it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge. For the vngodly & his vngodlynes are both like abhominable vnto God. Euen so yf worke & he yf made it also shal be punyshed together. Therefore shal there a plague come vpon the ymages of the heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abomination, a temptation vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the settinge out of ymages is the begynnynge of whordome, and the bringinge vpon of them is the destruction of life. For they were not from the begynnynge, nether shall they continue for euer. The welthy ydilnes of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therfore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whā a father mourned for his sonne yf was taken awaye fro him, he made him an ymage (in all yf haile, of his deed sonne: & so begāne to worshiipe him as God, which was but a deed mā & ordered his seruautes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme & thorow lōge custome, this errō was kepte as a lawe, & tyrautes cōpelled mē by violēce to honō ymages. As for those yf were so farre of, yf mē might not worshiipe them presently, their picture was brought fro farre (like the ymage of a kyng) whō they woldehonoure) to the intent that with greate diligence they might worshipec him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular conynge of the crafterman gaue the ignoraunt also a greate occasiō to worshipec ymages. For the workman wyllinge to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his conynge to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the bruty of the worke) the comon people was disceaued, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erroure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affeccion, or to do some pleasure vnto Kinges) ascribē vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be genen vnto no man.

Psal. 7. a

Deut 18 b
Iere 7. a
and 19. a

Moreover, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greate warres of ignoraunce, these many and greate plages called they peace. For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable watches: so that they kepte nether li fe ner marriage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death maliciously, or els greued his neyghboure wth aduoutrie. And thus were all thinges myrte together: bloude, manslaughter, theft, dissimulacion, corrupcion, vnfaithfulnessse, sedicion, periury, disquyetinge of good men, vnchastitie, defylinge of soules, chastynginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of marriage, mysordre of aduoutrie and vncleannesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnyng and ende of alle euell. For they y^e worshipec Idols, ether they are madd whā they be mery, or prophetic lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly mansweare them selues. For in so moch as their trust is in y^e Idols (which haue nether soule ner vnderstandinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurt them.

Therefore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthely: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearing vniustly to disceane, and dyspyninge righteousnes. For their swearing is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth euer with the offence of the vngodly.

The XV. Chapter.

21 O thou (O God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordrest thou alle thinges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. If we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is perfecte righteousness: And to knowe y^e righteousness and power, is the rote of immortallite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath not disceaued vs: as the payntinge of the picture (an vnprofitable labour) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight entiseth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loveth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

The xv. Chap.

Nevertheless, they that loue soche euell thinges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh & tempereth soft earth, labourereth it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessell, what so euer serueth for oure vse: and so of one pece of claye he maketh some cleane vessell for seruice, and some contrary. But where coenery vessell serueth, that knoweth y^e potter himself. So with his vayne labour he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not y^e more because he shal labo^r ner because his life is shorte: but stryuereth to excell goldsmithes, & syluer smithes & copper smithes, and taketh it for an hono^r to make vayne thinges. For his hert is as ashes, his hope is but vaine earth & his life is more vyle then claye: for so moch as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gaue him his soule to worke, and brethed in him the birch of life. They counte oure life but a pastyme, and oure conuersacion to be butt a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he y^e of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himselfe to offende aboue all other.

All the enemies of thy people and y^e holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, unhappie and exceabinge proude vnto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the heithē to be goddes, which nether haue ey sight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: & as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borrowed sprete, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshippinge, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. Yee they worshippe beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thinges that can not fele vnto them, & they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of the se beestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thinge, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thankes vnto God.

The XVI. Chapter.

Num. 11. g. 21 Of these and soch other thinges haue they suffred worthy punysshment, & thorow y multitude of beestes are they rored out. Insteade of y which punysshmentes thou hast graciously ordred thine awne people, & geuen them their desyre that they loged for: a new & straunge taist, preparinge them quales to be their meate: to the intent y (by the thinges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they y were so greedy of meate, might be withdrawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shorte tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and taisted a new meate. For it was requisite y (without eny excuse) destruccion shulde come vpo those which used tyrāny, & to shewe onely vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. For whan the cruell woodnesse of the beestes came vpon them, they perished thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

Num. 21. a

But with stōdinge y wiath endured not perpetually, but they were put in feare for a litle season, y they might be reformed, hauinge a token of saluacion, to remembre the cōmaundement of thy lawe. For he y cōuerted, was not healed by the thinge y he sawe, but by THE LORD of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, y it is thou, which delinereest frō all euell. As for thē whan they were bytten w grethoppers and flies, they died, for they were worthy to perish by soch: But nether the teth of dragons ner of venymous wormes ouercame y children, for thy mercy was euer by them & helped thē. Therefore were they punyshed to remēbre thy wordes, but hastely were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulness, that they might not vse thy helpe.

raynes were they persecuted, & thorow fyre were they cōsumed. For it was a wonderous thinge that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thinges: but y wolde is y auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was y fyre so tame, y the beestes which were sent to punysh y vngodly, brient not: & y because they shulde se & knowe, y they were persecuted w the punysshment of God. And somtyme brient the fyre in the water on every syde, y it might destroye y vnrightheous naciō of the earth. Againe, thou hast fed thine awne people w angels fode, & sent thē bried ready from heauē (without their labō) beyng very pleasant & well gusted. And to shewe thy riches & swetnesse vnto thy childre, thou gauest every one their desyre, so y every man might take what liked him best. But the snowe & yse abode the violēce of the fyre, & melted not: y they might knowe, y the fyre burninge in the hale & rayne, destroyed y frute of y enemies: y fyre also forgatt his strength agayne, y y righteous might be nourished. For y creature y serueth y (which art y maker) is feare in punysshinge y vnrightheous, but it is easy & gentle to do good, vnto soch as put their trust in the. Therefore dyd all thinges alter at the same tyme, & were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is y noyse of all thinges, accordinge to y desyre of thē y had neede therof: y y childre (O LORD) whō thou louest, might knowe, y it is not nature & the growinge of frutes y fedeth mē, but y it is y worde, which preserueth thē y put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed w the fyre, as soone as it was warmed w a litle Sonne beame, it melted: y all men might knowe, y thankes ought to be geuen vnto y before y Sommer yse, & y thou oughtest to be worshipped before y daye sprynge. For y hope of y vnto the full shal melt awaie as the wynter yse, & perishe as water, y is not necessary.

And because they suffred not y same thinges, they magnified the: and they y were vexed afore (because they were not hurted new) thanked the, and besought y (o God) y there might be a difference. Therfore had they a burnynge piler of fyre to ledethem in the vnkowne waye, z thou gauest them the Sonne for a fre gife without eny hurte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light z to be put in the prison of darcknes, which kepte thy childre in captiuyte, by whom the vncorrupt light of the lawe of y woulde was fore to be geuen. Whan they thought to slaye the babes of the righteous (one beinge laied out, and yet preserued to be leder vnto the other) then broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, and destroydest these in the mightie water. Of that night were cure fathers certified afore, that they knowinge vnto what oethes they had geuen credēce, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued y health of the righteous, but the vngedly were destroyed. For like as thou hast hurte cure enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou calledest afore. For the righteous children of the good men offred seciely, z ordred the lawe of righteousness vnto vnite: y the iust shulde receaue good and cuell in like maner, singinge prayses vnto y father of all men. Agayne, there was herde an vconuenient voyce of the enemies, z a piteous crye for childre that were bewayled. The master and the seruaūt were punished alike, the meane man and the kynge suffred in like maner. For they all together had innumerable that dyed one death.

Exo. 12. a Neither were y lyuinge sufficient to bury y deed, for in y twyncklinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of thē was destroyed. Als oft as God helped thē afore, yet wolde it not make thē beleue: but in y destrucciō of y first borne they kneweled, that it was y people of God. For whyle all thinges were still, z whā y night was in y myddest of hir course, thy Almighty worde (o LORDE) leapt downe frō heauē out of y royall trone, as a rough mā of warre, in y myddest of y londe y was destroyed: z y sharpe swerde perfermed y strait cēmaundmēt, stādinge z fyllinge all thinges w death: yee it stode vpo y earth z reached vnto the heauen. Then the sight of the euill dreames vexed them sodenly, and fearfulness came vpon them vnawares.

The boke of Wysdome.

D Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyk, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed the, shewed the these thinges afore: so that they were not ignorant, wherfore they perished.

Num. 16 g The tentacion of death touched the righteous also, and amonge the multitude in the wyldernes there was insurreccion, but thy wiath endured not longe. For the faultlesse man wente in all the haist, and toke the battayll vpon him, brought forth the weape of his ministracion: even prayer and thy celsours of recouilunge, set himself agaynst thy wiath, and so brought the misery to an ende: declaringe therby, that he was thy seruaunt. For he overcame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapes of might: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembrance of the ooch and couenaunt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the wiath, and parted thy waye vnto the luyng. And why in his longe garnēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers graue, and thy maiesy was written in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afrayed of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wiath.

The XIX. Chapter.

2 Why for the vngodly, the wiath came vpo them without mercy vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happē vnto them: how that whan they had consented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greute diligence they wolde repent, and folowe vpon them. For whan they were yet mournynge and makinge lamentacion by the graues of the deed, they deuysed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their flugge, whom they had cast out afore thy prayer. Worthy necessity also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the thinges that happened vnto them afore. But the chunge that was wantynge of their punysshment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormētes: that thy people might haue a marvelous passage thorow, and that these might synde a straunge death.

Exo. 14 a B There was enery creature fashioned agayne of the new acordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commaundementes, and thy children might be kepte without hurte. For the cloude ouersadowed their tentes, and the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so that in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greatedepe became a grene felde: wherethorow all thy people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous and marvelous workes. For as thy horses, so were they fedd, and leapt like lābes, praysinge the (o LORDE) which haddest deliuered them. And why: they were yet myndefull of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth fyles in steade of cattell, and how thy ryuer scauled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fyfshes.

But at the last they sawe a new creacion of byrdes, what tyme as they were discea-ued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punysshmentes came vpon thy synners, not without the tokēns which came to passe afore by the vehemēce of thy streames: for they suffred worthely a cordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abhominably and churlishly with straungers. Some receaved no vnknowne gesses, some brought thy straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaved no straungers with their wylls, but persecuted those also, and dyd the moch enell, that receaved the gladly. Therefore were they punysshed with blyndnesse, like as they that were couered with sedane darcknesse at the doores of the righteous: so thy every one sought thy inraunce of his doore.

D Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tyme is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepeth their melody: which maye easely be perceaved, by the sight of the thinges that are cometo passe. The drye lōde was turned in to a watery, and thy thinge that afore swam in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (contrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench. Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that wote with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not despysed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

Ecclesiasticus called Jesus Syrac

The prologe of Jesus the sonne of Syrac vnto his boke.

Many and greatemē haue declared wyſdome vnto vs out of ʒ lawe, out of y prophetes ʒ out of oher that folowed thē. In the which thinges Iſrael ought to be commended, by the reaſon of doctrine and wyſdome: Therfore they that haue it ʒ reade it, ſhulde not onely thē ſelues be wyſe there thorow, but ſerue other alſo with teachinge and wrytinge.

Aſter that my graund father Jesus had geuen diligent labour to reade the lawe, the prophetes and oher bokes that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exerciſed himſelf therein: he purpoſed alſo to wryte ſome thinge of wyſdome and good maners, to the intēt that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyſe, might haue the more vnderſtandin- ge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuerſacion.

Wherfore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not ſo eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wrytten in the Hebrue tonge, ſoundeth not ſo well whan it is traſlated in to another ſpeache. Not only this boke of myne, but alſo the lawe, the prophetes, and oher bokes ſounde farre other wyſe, then they do, whan they are ſpoſen in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yeare whan I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomy Euer- ges, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherfore I thought it good and neceſſary, to beſtowe my diligence and trauayle to inter- prete this boke. And conſideringe that I had tyme, I laboured and dyd my beſt to perſourme this boke, and to brynge it vnto light: that the ſtrañgers alſo which are diſpoſed to lerne, might applye them ſelues vnto good maners, ʒ lyue a cordinge to ʒ lawe of ʒ LORDE.

What this boke conteyneth.

- Chap. I. All wyſdome commeth of God, for he onely is wyſe. The frute of Gods feare.
Chap. II. An exortacion vnto patience & to the feare of God.
Chap. III. A doctryne for chyldren, how they ſhulde honour father and mother: & how men ought to be gentle and lowly.
Chap. IIII. Wyſdome lerneth to be mercifull and louynge vnto euery man. What rewarde wyſdome geueth, to them that loucher and ſe- fe her.
Chap. V. Let no man truſt in his riches, let no man leane vpon his owne power, let no man deſpyſe the mercy & longe ſufferynge of God.
Chap. VI. Of true & falſe frendſhippe. An exor- tacion to herken vnto wyſdome.
Chap. VII. Many goodly leſſons and docume- tes.
Chap. VIII. He teacheth to beware of ſtrife, to ſhynke ſcorne of no mā, to avoyde ſuertſhipp, to beware of bianeſſe and cruell people.
Chap. IX. How mē ſhulde behaue them ſelues with their wyues, & how olde frendſhippe ought not to be broken &c. with many other good leſ- ſons.
Chap. X. Of iudges & rulers of the people. How payde ought to be eſchued.
Chap. XI. Many good inſtruccions.
Chap. XII. How and to whom a mā ſhulde do good.
Chap. XIII. How the poore ſhulde kepe himſelf from the riche.
Chap. XIII. The unfaithfulnes and wickednes of rich nygardes. An exortacion to do good & to cleue vnto wyſdome.

- Chap. XV. The profit that commeth of the fea- re of God & of wyſdome, which the wicked will not receaue.
Chap. XVI. The multitude of euell chyldren is not good, for the grace of God is not amonge the vngodly. The patience, mercy, and wyſdo- me of God.
Chap. XVII. How God made man, endewed him with giftes, openynge his wil & lawe vnto him: but choſe Iſrael out of all people.
Chap. XVIII. The wyſdome of God and ordre of his workes, which no man maye comprehend. The dayes of man are ſhorte. God ſuffreth lon- ge, rebuketh and teacheth all ſoch as wil recea- ue nurtoure.
Chap. XIX. Many good leſſons of wyſdome.
Chap. XX. Men ought to geue warnynge, to exorte and to rebuke: but not to be cruell, vio- lent or malicious. Of ſylence, and ſpeakinge, & how to beware of lyes.
Chap. XXI. All maner of synnes ought to be eſ- chued. The difference of the wyſe and fooliſh.
Chap. XXII. A foole wyll not be reſourmed nor rebuked. Be faithfull vnto thy neighbour and frende.
Chap. XXIII. A faithfull prayer vnto God, to pre- ſerue the mouth and tonge from noyſome wor- des and oother, & the hert from euell thoug- tes. How greate abhominacion aduontry is.
Chap. XXIII. A commendacion of wyſdome.
Chap. XXV. There is nothinge better, then an honeſt verteous woman. A gayne, there is no- thinge worſe then an euell, vngodly, & frowar- de woman.
Chap. XXVI. A commendacion and prayſe of a good honest woman, and how noysome an euell wyfe is.

Chap. XXVII. Many goodly sentences.

Chap. XXVIII. Men ought not to take vengeance, but every man to forgive his neighbour, & not to beare euell wil ner to stryue. What harme cometh of false tongues & flanderers.

Chap. XXIX. How mē shulde haue compassion and lende vnto their neighbours: and how they that borowe, ought to behaue them selues agayne. Of vnaduyfed suerreshippe. How every man ought to be content with that he hath, and not to be chargesble vnto other.

Chap. XXX. Who so loueth his children, teacheth them, nurturcth them and chasteneth the. Health is a noble gift.

Chap. XXXI. The misery of the euertous. How one shulde behaue him self at the table, and be measurable in meate and drynke. What harme cometh of drynkinge to much wyne.

Chap. XXXII. To be set in rule & dignite, shulde not make a man proude and hie minded, but to feare, to be diligent and faithfull vnto them, that are committed vnto him &c. with other good lessons.

Chap. XXXIII. How God ought to be feared, & his lawe kept. The difference of dayes and of men. The ordyng of children and household.

Chap. XXXIII. The hope of the vngodly is vayne: the righteous shalbe preserved, for he putteth his trust in God, which wil not be reconciled with offeringes, but with an innocent life.

Chap. XXXV. The offeringe that pleaseth God is to kepe his commaundementes, to be thankfull, mercifull, and to ceasse from synne. God is the defender of wyddowes, fatherlesse, and oppressed, and heareth their prayer.

Chap. XXXVI. An earnest prayer vnto God for helpe agaynst the enemies. The prayse of an honest woman.

Chap. XXXVII. Of true & false frendshipe. Good counsell ought to be sought at them, which are vertuous and feare God, but first at God himself. Of wysdome and sobernesse.

Chap. XXXVIII. Physicians and medicyns ought not to be despyed, but vsed as a gift of God: neuertheles God himself is first to be sought in all sickness. Men shulde be measurable in mourninge for the deed, & prepare them selues also vnto death. Every workman ought to be diligent in his labour, and to please God with keepinge his commaundementes.

Chap. XXXIX. Wysdome and the feare of God excell all other thinges. All thinges are made to serue the faithfull.

Chap. XL. The life of man is a battayll. All thinges passe awaie, but the truerth abydeth for euer. The liberall and lounge condicions of the righteous. The vnfaithfullnes and nigardnesse of the vngodly.

Chap. XLI. Death is fearfull vnto the wicked, but a loye vnto the righteous. The cursinge of the vngodly. A good name is a noble thinge. What the thinges be, wherof a man ought to be ashamed.

Chap. XLII. Where one ought not to be ashamed. The care and bringinge vpon of childre. The power and wysdome of God.

Chap. XLVII. Of Nathan, David and Salomon.

Chap. XLVIII. Of Elyas, Ezechias and Esay.

Chap. XLIX. The actes of good Josias. The decaye of Jerusalem. Of the prophetes and patriarches.

Chap. I. A commendacion of Symeon the sonne of Onias.

Chap. LI. A prayer of Jesus Syrac. Wysdome calleth the ignorant vnto her.

The first Chapter.

Al wysdome cōmeth of God the LORDE, & hath bene euer w him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred y sonde of the see, y drop pes of the rayne & the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heaue, y bredeth of the earth & the depenesse of the see? Who hath sought out the ground of Gods wysdome, which hath bene before all thinges? Wysdome hath bene before all thinges, and the vnderstandinge of prudence from euerlastinge. (Gods worde in the heyth is the well of wysdome, and the everlastinge cōmaundementes are the inraunce of her.) Vnto whom hath y rote of wysdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wysdome bene discovered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the manyfolde entraunce of her?

There is one: eue the best, the mater of all thinges, y Allmightie, y kynge of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sytteth vpon his trone, beinge a God of dominion: he hath created her thorow y holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: he hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh accordinge to his gift: he geueth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshipe and triumphe, gladnesse & a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a niery hert, geueth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, & in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

C The loue of God is honorable wysdome: loke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wondrous thinges it doth. The feare of LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shal go with the chosen women, and shal be knowne of y^e righteous and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is y^e right Gods seruyce, that p^{er}serueth and iustifieth the hert, and geueth myrth & gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal be happie: and whan he hath nede of comfort, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wysdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir giftes, & the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wysdome, and geueth plenteous peace & health. He hath sene her & nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wysdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto hono^r.

D The feare of the LORDE is the rote of wysdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wysdome is vnderstandinge and deuocion of knowlege, but wysdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryncth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, & his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A paciēt man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and the shal he haue y^e rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstōdinge wil hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mōs lippes shal speake of his wysdome. In the treasures of wysdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshipe of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wysdome, kepe the commandement, and God shal geue her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome & nurture, he hath pleasure in faith and longynge mekenesse, and he shal fylle the treasures ther of. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a duble hert. Be not an ypocrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Marck well these thinges, lest then happen to fall and brynge thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discover thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregacion: because thou woldest not receaue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of faynednes and disceate.

The ii. Chapter.

My sonne, yf thou wilt come in to y^e seruyce of God, stonde fast in righteousness and feare, & arme thy soule to tentacion: saddle thine hert, and be paciēt: bowe downe thine eare, receaue the wordes of vnderstandinge, and shrencke not awaye, whan thou art encysed. Holde the fast vpon God, ioyne thyself vnto him & suffre, that thy life maye encrease at the last. What so euer happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in beuynesse, and be paciēt in thy trouble. For like as golde and syluer are tryed in the fyre, euen so are acceptable men in the fornace of aduersite. Belene in God, and he shal helpe the: ordre thy waie a right, and put thy trust in him. Holde fast his feare, and growe ther in. O ye y^e feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shrencke not awaye frō him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare y^e LORDE, beleue him, and youre rewarde shal not be emptye. O ye that feare y^e LORDE, put y^e re trust in him, & mercy shal come vnto y^e for pleasure. O ye y^e feare y^e LORDE, see y^e lo ne vpo him, & y^e hertes shal be lightened.

Considre the olde generacions of men (o ye children) and marck them well: was there euer eny one confounded, that put his trust in the LORDE? Who euer continued in his feare, and was forsaken? Or whom dyd he euer despise, that called faithfully vpo him? For God is gracious and mercifull, he forgetteth synnes in y^e tyme of trouble, and is a defender for all them y^e seke him in y^e truethe. Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wicked lippes and euell occupied handes, & to the synner y^e goeth two maner of waies. Wo be vnto them that are lowse of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therfore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost pacience, forsaken the right wayes, and are turned back in to frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to vyset the?

They that feare y^e LORDE, wil not mistrust his worde: and they that loue him, wyl kepe his commandement. They that feare the LORDE, wyl seke out y^e thinges that are pleasaunt vnto him: and they that loue him, shal fulfill his lawe. They that feare y^e LORDE wil prepare their hertes, and hysble their scules in his sight. (They that feare the LORDE, kepe his commandementes, and wil be

The III. Chapter.

The children of wysdome are a cōgregation of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Heare me youre father (o my deare children) and do there after, that ye maye be safe. For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shall be forgiven him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shall haue ioye of his owne children: & whan he maketh his prayer, he shall be herde. He that honoureth his father, shall haue a longe life: & he that is obedient for Y LORDES sake, his mother shall haue ioye of him.

He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honour thy father in dede, in worde and in all patience, that thou mayest haue his blessing: for the blessing of Y father buydeth vp the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundations. Reioyse not whan thy father is reprovēd, for it is no honour vnto the, but a shame. For the worshippe of a mans father is his awne worshippe, and where the father is without honour, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge fayle, haue patience wth him, & despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shall not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shall be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shall be founded for the in righteousness) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembered: thy synnes also shall melt awaye, like as the yse in Y saye warme wether.

He Y forsaketh his father, shall come to shame: & he that despyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perfourme Y workes wth louynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loved aboue other men. The greater thou art, the more humble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt fynde fauour in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vnto God, & he is honoured of the lowly.

Seke not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and search not the groundes of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, thinke vpoⁿ that allwaye, and be not curious in many of his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se^e thine eyes, Y thinges Y are secrete. Make not thou to moch search in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the already, which be aboue Y capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wyttes in vanite. Now he that loueth parell, shall per^{ish} therein.

An harde herte shall saye euill at Y last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shall not prosper: & he that is frowarde of hert, wyll euer be the worse and worse) A wicked hert shall be ladē wth sorowes, and Y vngodly sinner wyll heape one synne vpon another. The counsell of the proude hath no health, for Y plante of synne shall be roted out in the. The hert of him Y hath vnderstandinge, shall perceauē hye thinges, and a good eare wil gladly hearken vnto wysdome. An hert that is wyse & hath vnderstandinge, wyll abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousness. Water quencherh burnynge fyre, & mercy reconcyketh synnes. God hath respect vnto him Y is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shall fynde a stronge holde.

The III. Chapter.

My sonne, defraude not the poore of his almes, and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath neede. Despise not an hongrie scule, and despye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is helpelesse, and withdraue not the gift from Y nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedy. Cast not thine eyes asyde fro^m Y poore, Y thou greue him not occasion to speake euill of the. For yf he complayne of Y in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shall be herde: euē he Y made him shall heare him. Be curteous vnto Y company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, & bowe downe Y heade to a man of worshippe. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answer, and Y wth mekenesse.

Deliver him Y suffreth wroge fro^m Y haue off^r oppressor, & be not faint harted whā thou sittest in iudgmēt. Be merciful vnto Y father les as a father, & be in steade of an husbāde unto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obedient sonne of thy yest, and he shal loue the more the mother doth. Wisdometh bretheth life in to hir children, receaueth the y seke her, and wyll go before the in y waye of righteousness. He y loueth her, loueth life: and they y seke her diligently, shal haue greate ioye. They y kepe her, shal haue the heretage of life: for where she entreteth in, there is the blessing of God. They that honoure her, shal be y seruantes of the holy one: and they that loue her, are beloued of God. Who so geueth eare unto her, shal iudge the heith: and he that hath respecte unto her, shal dwell safely.

C He that beleueth her, shal haue her in possession, and his generacion shal endure: for whan he falleth, she shal go with him before all. Feare, drede and tentacion shal she bringe vpon him, and crye him in hir doctrine: tyll she haue so proued him in his thoughtes, that he committe his soule unto her. The shal she stablish him, bringe the right waye unto him, make hi a glad man, shewe him his secretes, and heape vpon him the treasures of knowlege, vnderstandinge and righteousness. But yf he go wronge, she shal forsake him, and geue him ouer in to the handes of his enemye.

D My sonne, make moch of the tyme, eschue the thinge y is euill, and for y life shame not to saye y truely. For there is a shame y bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth worshippe and faub. Accepte no person after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of y neghb in his aduersite, and kepe not back y counsell whā it maye do good, nether hyde y wysdome in hir beuty. For in the cōge is wysdome knowne, so is vnderstandinge, knowlege and lernynge in the talkinge of the wyse, and stedfastnesse in y workes of righteousness. In no wise speake agaynst the worde of treuth, but be ashamed of the lyes of thine owne ignorance. Shame not to confesse thine erroure, and submitte not thyself vnto every man because of synne. Withstande not y face of the mightie, and stryue not agaynst the streame. But for the treuth stryue thou vnto death, and God shal fight for the agaynst thine enemies. Be not hasty in thy tonge, nether slack and negligent in thy workes. Be not as a lyon in thine owne house, destroyinge thy housholde folkes, and oppressing them y are vnder the. Let not thine hande be stretched out to receaue, and shutt whan thou shuldest geue.

The V. Chapter.

Trust not vnto thy riches, and saye not: rush, I haue ynough for my life. (For it shal not helpe in the tyme of vengeance and temptacion) Solowe not the lust of thine owne hert in thy strength, and saye not: rush, how shulde I, or who wyl cast me downe because of my workes? for doutles God shal auenge it. And saye not: I haue committed no synnes, butt what euell hath happened me? For the Almightye is a pacient rewarder. Because y synne is geue y, be not therfore without feare, nether heape one synne vpo another. And saye not: rush, the mercy of the LORDE is greate, he shal forgue my synnes, be they neuer so many. For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cometh downe vpon synners.

Make no tariēge to turne vnto y LORDE, and put not of fro daye to daie: for sodenly shal his wrath come, and in the tyme of vengeance he shal destroye y. Trust not in wicked riches for they shal not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to euery wynde, and go not in to euery waye: for so doth the synner that hath a dubble tonge (Stonde fast in y waye of y LORDE) be stedfast in thy vnderstandinge, abyde by y worde, and solowe the worde of peace and righteousness. Be gentle to heare y worde of God, that thou mayest vnderstande it, and make a true answer w wysdome. Be swift to heare, but slowe and pacient in geuinge answer. Yf thou hast vnderstandinge, shappe thy neghb an answer: Yf no, laye thine hande vpo y mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vndiscrete worde, and so cōfounded. Honō and worshippe is in a māns wyse talkinge, but y cōge of y vndiscrete is his awne distrucciō. Be not a pryncy accuser as longe as thou lyvest, and vse no slaunders w thy tonge. For shame and sorrow goeth ouer the these, and an euell name ouer him that is dubble tonged: but he that is a pryncy accuser of other men, shal be hated, envoyed and confounded. Se that thou iustifieth the small and greate alyke.

The VI. Chapter.

Be not y neghbours enemye for y frendes sake: for who so is euell shal be y heyre of rebuke and dishonō, and who so euer beareth envye and a dubble cōge, offendeth. Be not proude in the deuoyce of thine owne vnderstandinge, lest y leanes wyther, and y frate be destroyed, and so thou be left as a drye tre. For a wicked soule destroyeth him that hath it, maketh him to be laughed to scoorne of his enemies, (and bringeth him

Eccli. 37. a If thou gettest a frende, proue him first, and be not haiste to geue him credence. For some man is a frende but for a tyme, and wyl not abyde in the daye of trouble. And there is some frende that turneth to enemye, and taketh parte agaynst the: and yf he knowe eny hurte by the, he telleth it out. A gayne, some frende is but a companyon at the table, and in the daye of nede he contynucth not. But a sure frende wil be vnto þe euen as thy- ne owne self, and deale faithfully with thy honsholde folke. Yf thou suffre trouble and aduersite, he is with the, and hyderth not him self from the. Departe fro thine enemies, yee and bewarre of thy frendes.

Eccli. 37. d A faithfull frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth soch one, findeth a noble trea- sure. A faithfull frende hath no peare, the weighe of golde and syluer is not to be com- pared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faith- full frende is a medecyne of life, ⁊ they þe fea- re the LORDE, shal synde him. Who so fea- reth the LORDE, shal prospere with frendes: and as he is himself, so shal his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctryne fro thy youth vp, so shalt thou synde wysdome tyll thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte paciety for hir good fru- tes. For thou shalt haue but litle labour in hir worke, but thou shalt eate of hir frutes right soone. How excedinge sharpe is wis- dome to vlnerned men? an vnstedfast body wyl not remayne in her. Vnto soch she is as it were a twichstone, ⁊ he casteth her from him in all the haist: for wysdome is w him but in name, there be but few þe haue knowle- ge of her. (But with them that knowe her, she abyderth euē vnto þe appearinge of God.)

Mat. 23. c D Geue eare (my sonne) receaue my doctry- ne, and refuse not my counsell. Put thy fote in to hir lynces, and take hir yock vpon thy neck: bowe downe thy shulder vnder her, bea- re hir patiently, and be not weery of hir ban- des. Come vnto her with þe whole hert, and kepe hir waves with all thy power. Seke af- ter her, and she shal be shewed the: and whā thou hast her, forsake her not. For at the last thou shalt synde rest in her, and that shal be turned to thy greate ioye. Then shal hir fet- ters be a stronge defence for the, ⁊ hir yock a glorious rayment. For the bewtye of life is in her, and hir bandes are the coup'inge to- gether of saluacion. See a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crow- ne of ioye shalt thou weere.

My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue vnderstandinge: and yf thou wilt applye þe mynde, thou shalt be wyse. Yf thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt re- ceauē doctryne: and yf thou delyte in hearin- ge, thou shalt be wyse. Stande with þe mul- titude of soch elders as haue vnderstandin- ge, and consente vnto their wysdome with thine hert: that thou mayest heare all godly sermons, and that the worthy sentences esca- pe the not. And yf thou seist a man of discre- te vnderstandinge, gett the soone vnto him, and let thy fote treade vpon the steppes of his doctes. Let thy mynde be vpon the com- mandementes of God, ⁊ be earnestly occu- pied in his lawes: so shal he stablish þe hert, and geue þe wysdome at thine owne desyre.

mightie hath created. Make not thy boast in the multitude of thy wickednes, but humble thy selfeuen from thine hert: and remember that the wrath shall not be longe in tarringe, and that the vengeance of the flesh of þe vngodly is a very fyre and worme. Be not ouer thy frende for eny good, ner thy faithfull brother for the best golde.

C Departe not from a discrete and good woman, that is fallen vnto the for thy porcion in the feare of the LORDE, for y^e gift of hir honesty is aboue golde. Where as thy seruant worketh truly, increate him not euell, ner the hyeling that is faithfull vnto the. Loue a discrete seruaunte as thine owne soule, defraude him not of his libertie, nether leaue him a poore man. If thou haue catell, loke well to them: and yf they be for thy profit, kepe them. If thou haue sonnes, brynge them vp in nurture and lernynge, and holdethem in awe from their youth vp. If thou haue daughters, kepe their beddys, and shew not thy face therefull toward the. Marrye y^e daughter, and so shalt thou perfourme a weightie matter: but geue her to a man of vnderstandinge. If thou haue a wife after thine owne mynde, forsake her not: (but committe not thy selfe to the hatefull.)

Honoure thy father from thy whole herte, and forgette not the sorefull trauaile that thy mother had wth the: remember that thou wast borne thowow them, and how cast thou recompense them the thinges that they haue done for the. Feare the LORDE with all y^e soule, and honoure his ministers. Loue thy master with all thy strength, and forsake not his seruauntes. Feare the LORDE with all thy

D soule, and honoure his prestes. Geue them their porcion of the first frutes and increase of y^e earth, like as it is commaunded the: geue them y^e shulders, and their appoynted offeringes, and firstlinges. Reach thine hande vnto the poore, that God maye blesse the with plenteousnes. Be liberall vnto all men lyuynge, yet let not but do good euen to them that are deed.

Let not them that wepe be without comforte, but mourne with soch as mourne. Let it not greue the to vsethe sick, for that shal make the to be loued. What so euer thou takest in hande, remember the ende, and thou shalt neuer do amysse.

gaynst y^e. For golde and silver hath vndone many a man, yee eue y^e hertes of kynges hath it made to fall. Stryue not wth a mā that is full of wordes, and laye no stickes vpon his fyre. Kepe no company with the vnlearned, lest he geue thy kynred an euell repute. Despyse not a man that turneth himself awaye from synne, and cast him not in the teth withall: but remember y^e we are frayle everychone. Thynte scome of no mā in his olde age, for we waxe olde also. Be not glad of the death of thine enemye, but remember that we must dye all the sorte of vs (and fayne wolde we come in to ioye.) Despyse not the sermons of soch elders as haue vnderstandinge, but acquaintance thy selfe wth the wyse sentences of them: for of them thou shalt lerne wysdome and the doctrine of vnderstandinge, and how to serue greate men without complaynte.

Go not from y^e doctryne of the elders, for they haue lerned it of their fathers. For of them thou shalt lerne vnderstandinge, so y^e thou mayest make answer in y^e tyme of neede. Kyndele not y^e coales of synners, lest thou be brent in the fyre flammes of their synnes. Resist not the face of the blasfemer, that he laye not wayte for thy mouth. Lende not vnto him that is mightier then thyself: If thou lendest him, counte it but lost. Be not suertie aboue y^e power: yf thou be, then thynte surely to paye it. Go not to lawe wth the indige, for he wyl indige accordinge to his owne honoure. Trauayle not by the waye wth him y^e is branelesse, lest he do the euell: for he so loweth his awne wilfulnes, and so shalt thou perishe thowow his folly.

Stryue not with him that is angrie and cruell, and go not with him in to y^e wyldernes: for bloude is nothynge in his sight, and where there is no helpe, he shal murthure y^e. Take no counsell at fooles, for they loue nothynge but the thinges that please themselves. Make no counsell before a straunger, for thou canst not tell what wyl come of it. Ope not thine hert vnto every man, lest he be vnthriftfull to the, and put the to reprose.

The IX. Chapter.

Not gelous ouer y^e wyse of thy bosome, y^e she shew not some shrewed poynte of wicked doctryne vnto the. Geue not the power of thy lyfe vnto a woman, lest she come in y^e strength, and so thou be confounded. Loke not vpon a woman that is desyrous of many men, lest thou fall in to hir snares. Use not the company of a woman that is a player and dauser, and heare hir not, lest thou perishe thowow hir entysynge. Schol

Matt. 5 c Turne awaye thy face from a beutyfull woman, and loke not vpon the faynesse of other.

23 Many a man hath perished thorow the bewtye of women, for thorew it the desyre is kyndled as it were a fyre. (An aduenterous woman shalbe trodden vnder foote as myre, of every one that goeth by the waye. Many a man wonderinge the bewtye of a straunge woman, haue bene cast out, for hir wordes kyndle as a fyre.) Sytt not wth another mans wyfe by any meanes, lye not wth her vpon the bedd, make no wordes with her at y^e wyne: lest thine hert consent vnto her, & so thou wth thy bloude fall in to destruccion. Forsa ke not an olde frende, for the new shal not be like him.

A new frende is new wine: let him be olde, & thou shalt drynke him wth pleasure. Desyre not y^e honoure and riches of a synner, for thou knowest not what destruccion is for to come vpon him. Welyte not thou in the thinge that the vngodly haue pleasure in: beinge sure, that the vngodly shal not be accepted vntyll their grave.

C Repethe from the man that hath power to slaye, so nedest thou not to be afrayed of death. And yf thou comest vnto him, make no fawte, lest he happen to take awaye thy life. Remembre that thou goest in the myddest of snares, and vpon the bulwoikes of y^e cite. Bewarre of thy neighbour as nye as thou canst, and medle wth soch as be wyse and haue vnderstandinge. Let iust men be thy gestes, let thy myrch be in the feare of God, let the remembraunce of God be in thy mynde, and let all thy talkyng be in the commaundementes of the hyest. In the handes of craftesmen shal the woikes be commended, so shal the prynces of the people in the wysdome of their talkyng. of man the ruler of the cite is, soch are they that dwell therin also. An vnwise kinge destroyeth his people, but where they that be in auctorite are men of vnderstandinge, there the cite prospereth.

1. Re. 12. a

The power of the earth is in the hande of God, and whan his tyme is, he shal set a profitable ruler vpon it. In the hande of God is the power of man, and vpon the scribes shal he laye his honoure. Remembre no wronge of thyneighbour, and medle thou wth no vnrighteous woikes. Pryde is hateful before God and men, and all wickednes of the heithen is to be abhorred. Because of vnrighteous dealinge, wronge, blasphemies and diuerse disceate, a realme shal be translated fro one people to another.

25 There is nothinge worse then a curvions man. What prydest thou the, o thou earth and ashes? There is not a more wicked thinge, then to loue moneye. And why? soch one hath his soule to sell: yet is he but fylthie dogge whyle he lyueth.

And though the physician shewe his helpe neuer so longe, yet in conelucion it goeth after this maner: to daye a kynge, to morrow deed. For whan a man dyeth, he is the heyre of serpentes, beastes and womnes. The begynnyng of mans pryde, is to fall awaye from God: and why? his hert is gone from his maker, for pryde is the ougenall of all synne. Who so taketh holde therof, shalbe fylled wth cursinges, and at y^e last it shal ouerthrowe him. Therefore hath the LORDE brought the cōgregacions of the wicked to dishonō, and destroyed them vnto the ende.

God hath destroyed the seates of proude prynces, and sett vp the meke in their steade. God hath wythered the rotes of the proude heithen, and planted the lowly amonge them. God hath ouerthrowne the londes of the heithen, and destroyed them out of the grounde. He hath caused them to wyther awaye, he hath brought them to naught, and made the memoriall of them to cease from out of the earth. (God hath destroyed the name of the proude, and left the name of y^e humble of mynde.) Pryde was not made for man, nether worthfulnes for mens children. The seide of men that feareth God, shalbe brought to honoure: but y^e seide which transgresseth the commaundementes of y^e LORDE shalbe shamed. He y^e is the ruler amonge brethren, is holde in honoure amonge them, and he regardeth soch as feare the LORDE.

The glory of the riche, of the honorable and of the poore is the feare of God.

D

Ecclesiasticus.

Despyse not thou the iust poore man, and magnifie not þy rich vngodly. Greate is the iudge and mightie in hond, yet is there none greater, then he þy feareth God. Vnto þy seruaunt that is discreete, shal the fre do seruyce. He that is wyse and well nurtoured, wyll not grudge whan he is resourued, ⁊ an ignoraunt body shal not come to honoure. Be not proude to do thy worke, and dispare not in the tyme of aduersite. Better is he þy labourer, and hath plenteousnes of all thinges, then he þy is gorgious, and wanteth bred.

E My sonne, kepe thy soule in mekenes, and geue her hir due honoure. Who shal iustifie him, that synneth agaynst himself? Who wil honoure him, that dishonoureth his owne life? The poore is honoured for his faithfulness and truethe, but þy rich is had in reputacio because of his goodes. He that ordireth himself honestly in pouerte, how much more shal he behaue himself honestly in riches? And who so ordireth himself vnhonestly in riches, how much more shal he behaue himself vnhonestly in pouerte?

The XI. Chapter.

The wysdome of him þy is broughte lowe, shal lift vp his heade, and shal make him to syt amonge greate me. Commende not a man in his bewtye, nether despyse a man in his vtter apperaunce. The Bey is but a small beast amonge the foules, yet is hir frute erceadige swete. Be not proude of thy rayment, and exalte not thyself in the daye of thy honoure: for þy workes of the hyst onely are wonderfull: yee glorious, secrete and vnkowne are his workes. Many tyrantes haue bene fayne to syt downe vpon the earth, ⁊ þy vnklyly hath worne þy crowne. Many mightie me haue bene broughte lowe, and the honorable haue bene deliuered in to other mens handes. Condemne no man, be so re thou haue tryed out the matter: and whan thou hast made enquisicion, then resourme righteously. Geue no sentece before thou hast herde the cause, but first let men tell out their sayles.

B Stryue not for a matter that toucheth not thyself, and stonde not in the iudgment of synners. My sonne, medle not with many matters: ⁊ yf thou wilt be riche, thou shalt not gett it: and though thou rennest þy waye afore, yet shalt thou not escape. There is some mā that labourerth, and the more he weeriech himself, the lesse he hath. Agayne, some man is slouthfull, hath nede of helpe, wateth strength, and hath greate ponerte, and Gods eye loketh vpon him to good, setteth him vp Prosperite and aduersite, life and death, pouerte and riches come all of the LORD. Ecc. 1. c (Wysdome, nurtoure and knowlege of þy lawe are with God: loue and þy wayes of good are with him. Erroure and dardnes are made for synners: and they that exalte themselves in euell, waxe olde in euell.) The gift of God remayneth for the righteous, and his good wyl shal geue prosperite for euer. Some man is rich by lyuynge nygardly, and þy is the porcion of his rewarde, in that he sayeth: now haue I gotten rest, and now wyl I eate and drynke of my goodes myself alone. Ecc. 10. c

And yet he considereth not, that the tyme draweth nye, þy he must leaue all these thinges vnto other men, and dye himself. Sconde thou fast in thy conenaunt, and exercyse thyself therin, and remayne in the worke vnto þy age. Contynue not in the workes of synners, but put thy trust in God, and byde in thine estate: for it is but an easy thinge in þy sight of God, to make a poore man riche, and that suddenly. The blessinge of God haisteth to þy rewarde of the righteous, and maketh his frutes soone to flouish and prospere. Saye not: what helpeth it me? and what shal I haue yf whyle? Agayne, saye not: I haue ynough, how can I wante? Whan thou art in welfaere, forget not aduersite: and whan it goeth not well with the, haue a good hope, that it shal be better. For it is but a small thinge vnto God, in the daye of death to rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes. The aduersite of an houre maketh one to forgett all pleasure, and whan a man dyeth, his workes are discovered. Prayse no body before his death, for a man shal be knowne in his children. D

Bringe not euery man in to thine house, for the disceatfull layeth wayte dyuersly. Like as a partrich in a maide, so is the hert of the proude: and like as a spye, that loketh vpon the fall of his neghbo. For he turneth good vnto euell, and flaundireth the chosen. Of one sparck is made a greate fyre, ⁊ an vngodly mā layeth wayte for bloude. Beware of the disceatfull, for he ymagineth wicked thinges, to bringe þy in to a perpetuall shame. Yf thou takest an aleaunt vnto þy, he shal destroye the in vniquietnes, and dryue the from thine owne wayes. E

He stōdeth not in a good case, that is allway occupied in euell, & geueth no allmes: for the hyst hateth the synners, and hath mercy vpon them that shew the workes of repētaunce. Geue thou vnto soch as feare God, and receaue not a synner: As for the vngodly and synners, he shall recompense vengeance vnto them, and kepe them to the daye of wrath. Geue thou vnto the good, and receaue not the synner: do well vnto him that is lowly, but geue not to the vngodly. Let not the bierd be geuen him, that he be not mightier then thy self therein. For so shalt thou receaue twyse as moch euell, in all the good that thou doest vnto him: And why? the hyst hateth synners, and shall rewarde vengeance to the vngodly.

B In prosperite a frende shall not be knowne, & in aduersite an enemye shall not be hyd. For whan a mā is in wealth, it greueth his enemies: but in heynes and trouble a man shall knowe his frende. Trust neuer thine enemy, for like as an yron rusteth, so doth his wickednes. And though he make moch croutching and kneeling, yet kepe well thy mynde, and bewarre of him. Sett him not by y, nether let him sytt at thy right hāde: lest he turne him, gett in to thy place, take thy rowme and sette thy seate, and so thou at the last remembre my wordes, and be pricked at my sayenges.

C Bynde not two synnes together, for there shall not one be unpunished. Who wil haue pite of the charmer, that is stynged of y serpent, or of all soch as come nye y beastes? Eue so is it w him y kepeth cōpany with a wicked mā, & lappeth him self in his synnes. For a season wil he hyde w the, but yf thou stōmble, he tarieth not. An enemy is swete in his lippes, he can make many wordes & speake many good thinges: Yee he can wepe w his eies, but in his herte he ymagineth, how to throwe the into the pytte: & yf he maye fynde oportunitie, he wil not be satisfied w bloude. Yf aduersite come vpon the, thou shalt fynde him there first: & though he pteede to do y helpe, yet shall he undermyne y. He shall shake his heade, & clape his handes ouer y for very gladnes, & whyle he maketh many wordes, he shall dysguise his countenance. The XIII. Chapter.

Deut. 7. 2

Who so toucheth pitch, shall be fylled withall: and he that is familiar w y proude, shall clothe himself with pryde. He taketh a burthen vpon him, that accompanieth a more honorable man then him self. Therefore kepe no familiarite with one that is richer then thy self. How agree the kettel & the pott together? for yf y one be smytten agaynst the other, it shall be brokē. The rich dealeth vnrighteously, & threateneth withall: but y poore beunge oppressed and wrogeously dealt withall, suffreth scarcenesse, & geueth fayre wordes. Yf thou be for his profit, he useth the: but yf thou haue nothinge, he shall forsake the. As long as thou hast eny thinge of thine owne, he shall be a good felowe with the: Yee he shall make the a bare man, and not be sory for the. Yf he haue nede of the, he shall defraude the: & (with a preuy mock) shall he put the in an hope, and geue the all good wordes, and saye: what wāteest thou? Thus shall he shame y in his meate, vntill he haue supped the cleane vp twyse or thryse, and at the last shall he laugh the to scoine. Afterwarde, whan he seyth that thou hast nothinge, he shall forsake the, and shake his heade at the.

Beware, that thou be not disceaued and brought downe in thy simplenesse. (Be not to humble in thy wysdome, lest whan thou art brought lowe, thou be disceaued thow foolisshnes.) Yf thou be called of a nightie man, absent thy self, so shall he call the to him the more oft. Plesse not thou vnto him, that thou be not short out: but go not thou farre of, lest he forgett the. Withdrowe not y self fro his speach, but beleue not his many wordes. For w moch cōmunicacion shall he tempte the, and (w a preuy mock) shall he question y of thy secretes. The vnniercissull mynde of his shall marck y wordes, he shall not spare to do y hurte & to put y in prison. Bewarre, & take good hede to y self, for thou walkest in parell of y ouerthrowinge.

(Now whā thou hearest his wordes, make the as though thou werest in a dreame, & wake vp. Loue God all thy life longe, & call vpon him in thy nede.) Euery beast loueth his life, euen so let euery man loue his neighbour. All flesh wil resorte to their life, and euery man wil kepe company with soch as he is himself. But as y wolfe agreeth with the lambe, so doth the vngodly with y righteous. What felishippe shulde an holy man haue with a dogg? How can the ryche and the poore agree together? The wilde asse is the lyons pray in the wilbernesse, euen so are poore men the meate of the ryche. Like as the proude maye not awaye with lowlynes, euen so doth the riche abhorre the poore. Yf

a rich man fall, his frendes sett him vp agayne: but whan the poore falleth, his frendes forsake him. If a rich mā fall in to an error, he hath many helpers: he speaketh proude wordes, and yet men iustifie him.

But yf a poore man go wronge, he is punished: yee though he speake wisely, yet can it haue no place. Whan the riche man speaketh, every body holdeth his tōge: and loke what he sayeth, they prayse it vnto the cloudes. But yf the poore man speake, they saye: What felowe is this? and yf he do amysse, they shal destroye him. Riches are good vnto him that hath no synne in his conscience, and pouerte is a wicked thinge in the mouth of the vngodly. The hert of man chaungeth his countenaunce, whether it be in good or euell. A chearfull countenaunce is a tokē of a good hert, for els is it an harde thinge to knowe the thought.

Happie is he that hath had no heynenes in his mynde, and is not fallen from his hope. It becommeth not a covetous man and a nygarde, to be ryche: and what shulde a nygarde do with golde? He that with all his carefulnes heapeth together vnrightheously, gathereth for other folkes, and another mā shal make good chere with his goodes. He y is wicked vnto him self, how shulde he be good vnto ocher mē? How can soch one haue eny pleasure of his goodes? There is no thinge worse, then whan one disfauoreth himself, and this is a rewarde of his wickednes. If he do eny good, he doeth it not knowinge therof, and agaynst his will, and at the last he declareth his vngraciousnes. A nygarde hath a wicked eye, he turneth away his face, and despyseth his owne soule. A covetous mans eye hath neuer ynough in the porcion of wickednes, vntyll the tyme that he wither awaye, and haue lost his owne soule.

If he be constant in her, he shall not be moued: and yf he holde him fast by her, he shall not come to confucion. She shall brynge him to honoure amonge his neighbours, and in the myddest of the congregacion shal she open his mouth. With the spere of wysdome and vnderstandinge shal she fyll him, and clothe him with the garment of glory. She shal heape the treasure of myrrh and ioye vpon him, and geue him an everlastinge name to heretage. Foolish men wyll not take holde vpon her, but soch as haue vnderstandinge, wil mete her, for she is farre from pryde and disceate. Men that go aboute with lyes, wil not remembre her: (but men of tructh shal be founde in her, euen vnto the beholdinge of God.) Like as his mercy is greate, euē so is his pu-

Say not thou: I wyl hyde my self from God, for who wyl thinke vpon me from abo-

pe of people, for what is my soule amonge
so many creatures? Beholde, the heauen, yee the heauen of heauens, the depe, the earth and all that therin is, shall be moued at his presence: the mountaynes, the hilles and the foundacions of the earth shal shake for feare, whan God vysiteth them. These thinges doth no hert vnderstonde, but he vnderstandeth every hert, and who vnderstandeth his wayes? No man seyth his stome, and the most part of his workes are secreete. Who wil declare the workes of his righteousnes?
Or who shal be able to abyde them? for the couenaunt is farre from some, and the cryen-ge out of men is in the fulfillynge. He that is humble of hert, thinketh vpon soch thin-ges: but an vnwyse and erroneous man casteth his mynde vnto foolish thinges.

My sonne, herken thou vnto me, & lerne vnderstandinge, and marke my wordes with thine hert: I wyl geue the a sure doctrine, & planely shal I enstrucke the. God hath sett his workes in good ordre from the begynninge, and parte of them hath he sundered from the other. He hath garnysed his workes from euerlastinge, and their begynnynge acordinge to their generacions. None of the hyndered another, nether was eny of them dishobedient vnto his worde. After this, God looked vpō the earth, and fylled it with his goodes. With all maner of lyuinge beas-tes hath he covered the grounde, and they all shalbe turned vnto earth agayne.

cion and tonge, eyes and eares, and a hert to vnderstande, and fylled them with instruction & vnderstandinge. He created for them also the knowlege of the spirete, fylled their hert with vnderstandinge, and shewed them good and euell. He sett his eye vpon their hertes, declaringe vnto them his greace and noble workes: (that they shulde prayse his holy name together, reioyse of his wonders, & be tellinge of his noble actes.) Besydes this, he gaue them instruccion, and the lawe of li fe for an heretage. He made an everlastinge couenauit with them, and shewed them his righteousnes & iudgmentes. They sawe his glory with their eyes, and their eares herde the maiesty of his voyce. And he saide vnto them: beware of all vnrightheous thinges. He gaue euery man also a commaundement concernynge his neighbour.

B Their waies are euer before him, and are not hyd from his eyes. He hath sett a ruler vpon euery people, but Israel is y^e LORDES porcion. All their workes are as the Sonne in y^e sight of God, & his eyes are allwaye lo kyng vpon their wayes. All their vnrigh teousneses are manifest vnto him, & all their wickedneses are open in his sight. The mer cy y^e a man sheweth is as it were a pynse to him, and a mans good dede preseructh him as the apple of an eye. At the last shall he awake, & rewarde euery man vpon his hea de as he hath deserved, and shal turne them together in to the nethermost partes of the earth. But vnto them that wyl repent, he hath genē the waye of righteousness. As for such as be weake, he comforteth thē, suffreth them, and sendeth them the porcion of y^e ve rite. O turne then vnto the LORDE, forsake thy synnes, make thy prayer before the LOR DE, do the lesse offence, turne agayne vnto the LORDE, forsake thine vnrightheousnes, be an vtter enemy to abhominacion (lerne to knowe the righteousness and iudgmentes of God, stonde in the porcion that is sett forth for the & in the prayer of the most hye God. Go in to the porcion of the holy worlde, with such as be lyuinge and geue thanks vnto God.)

C Who wil prayse the LORDE in the hell? Abyde not thou in the erreure of the vnged ly, but geue him thākes before death. As for y^e deed, thankfulnessse perisherh from him as nothinge. Geue thou thanks in thy life, yee whyle thou art lyuynge & whole shalt thou geue thanks, and prayse God and reioyse in his mercy. O how greace is the louynge kyndnesse of the LORDE, and his mercifull goodnes vnto such as turne vnto him? For all thinges maye not be in man: & why? the sonne of man is not immortall, and he hath pleasure in the vanyte of wickednes. What is more cleare thē the Sonne? yet shal it fay le. Or what is more wicked, then the thinge that flesh and bloude hath ymagined? and that same shal be reprobued. The LORDE seyth the power of the hye heauen, and all are but earth and asshes.

The XVIII. Chapter.

God that lyueth for evermore, made all thinges together. God onely is righ teous, & remaineth a victorious kyng for euer. Who shalbe able to expresse the workes of him? Who hath sought out the grounde of his noble actes? Who shal de clare the power of his greatnesse? Or, who will take vpon him to tell out his mercy? As for the wonderous workes of y^e LORDE, there maye nothinge be taken from them, nothin ge maye be put vnto them, nether maye the grounde of them be founde out. But whan a man hath done his best, he must begynne agayne: and whan he thinketh to be come to an ende, he must go agayne to his labour. What is man? Wherto is he worth? What good or euell can he do? If the nombre of a mans dayes be allinost an hundred yeare, it is moche.

Like as the droppes of rayne are vnto y^e see, and as a grauell stone is in comparison of the sonde: so are these few yeares to the dayes euertlastinge. Therfore is y^e LORDE pacient with them, and poureth out his mer cy vpon them. He sawe and perceaued the thoughtes and ymaginacions of their har te, that they were euell: therfore heaped he vp his mercifull goodnes vpon them, and shewed them the waye of righteousness. The mercy that a mā hath, reacheth to his neigh benre: but y^e mercy of God is vpon all flesh. He chasteneth, he teacheth and nourtureth yee euen as a shepherde turneth agayne his flock, so doth he all them that receaue chas tenynge, nourtoure and doctryne. Mercifull is he vnto them, that stonde in awe of his iudgmentes.

My sonne, whan thou doest good, make no grudginge at it: and what so euer thou genest, speake no discomfortable wordes. Shal not the dew coole the heate? Euen so is a worde better then a gift. Is not a frend ly worde a good honest gift? but a gracious man geueth them both. A foolc shal cast a man in the tette, and that roughly, & a gift of the nygarde putterh out y^e eyes. Get the Humble thy self afore thou be sick, and in tyme of thy disease shewe thy conversacion. Let not to praye allwaye, and stonde not in feare to be reformed vnto death, for the rewarde of God endureth for ever. Before thou prayest, prepare thy soule, and be not as one y^e tempteth God. Whan thou hast ynough, remember the tyme of hunger: and whan thou art rich, thynke vpon the tyme of poverte and scarcenesse.

D From the mornynge vntyll the evenynge the tyme is chaunged, and all soch thynges are soone done in y^e sight of God. A wyse man feareth God in all thinges, and in the dayes of transgression he kepeth him self from synne. A discrete man hath pleasure in wysdome, and he that syndeh her, maketh moch of her. They that haue had vnderstandinge, haue dealt wysely in wordes, haue vnderstonde the truthe and righteousnes, and haue sought out wyse sentēces and iudgmentes. Solowe not thy lustes, but turne y^e from thine owne will. For yf thou geuest thy soule hir desyres, it shal make thine enemies to laugh the to scorne. Take not thy pleasure in greate voluptuousnes, z medle not to moch withall. Make not to greate cheare of the thinge that thou hast worne by avauntage: lest thou fall in to poverte, and haue no thinge in thy purse.

The XIX. Chapter.

A Labourynge man that is geuen vnto dioncennes, shall not be riche: and he that maketh not moch of small thynges, shal fall by litle and litle. Wyne and women make wyse men renagates, and put men of vnderstandinge to reprofe: and he that accompanieth adnouterers shal become a wicked man. Mothes and wormes shal haue him to heretage, yee he shal be sett vp to a greater example, and his soule shalbe rote out of the nombre. He that is haistie to geue credence, is light mynded, and doth agaynst himself. Who so reioyseth in wickednes, shal be punished: he that hateth to be reformed, his life shalbe shortened: and he that abhorreth bablinge of wordes, quencherh wickednes. He that offendeth agaynst his owne soule, shal repent it: and he that reioyseth in wickednes, shalbe punyshed.)

Rehearse not a wicked and churlish word: betwysse, and thou shalt not be hyndered. Shew thy secretes nether to frende ner foe, z yf thou hast offended, tell it not out. For he shal herken vnto the and marck the: and whan he syndeh oportunyte, he shall hate the. Yf thou hast herde a worde agaynst y^e neighbour, lett it be deed within the: and be sure, thou shalt haue no harme therby. A foolle trauaileth with a worde, like as a woman that is payned with bearinge of childe. Like as an arrowe short in a dogges chye, so is a worde in a foolles hert. Tell thy frende his faute, lest he be ignorant, and saye: I haue not done it, or yf he haue done it, that he do it nomore. Reproue thy neighbour, that he kepe his tonge: and yf he haue spokē, that he saye it nomore.

Tell thy neighbour his faute, for oft tymes an offence is made, and geue not credēce to enery worde. A man falleth somtyme with his tonge, but not with his will. For what is he, y^e hath not offended in his tonge: Geue thy neighbour warnynge, before thou threaten him, and geue place vnto the lawe of the LORDE. The feare of God is all wysdome, z he that is a right wyse man kepeth the lawe. As for the doctrine of wickednes, it is no wysdome, and the prouidenes of synners is no good vnderstandinge: it is but wickednesse and abhominacion z a blasphemynge of wysdome. A symple man of small vnderstandinge that feareth God, is better then one that hath moch wysdome, and transgresseth the lawe of the LORDE.

A craftye sotell man can be wyse, but he is vnrighteous, and with giftes he wraysteth the open and manifest lawe. A wicked man can behaue himself humbly, and can doute with his heade, and yet is he but a disceamer within. He hyderh his face, and disguyseth it: z because he shulde not be knowne, he preuenteth the.

And though he be so weake that he can do the no harme, yet whan he maye synde oportunyte, he shall do some euell. A man maye be knowne by his face, and one that hath vnderstandinge, maye be perceaued by the loke of his countenaunce. A mans garment, laughter z goynge, declare what he is.

gene warnynge and to reprove, then to beare well will: for he that knowlegeth him self openly, shalbe preserved from hurt and destruction. Like as whan a chamberlayne thowrow desyre and lust desyleth a mayden, even so is it with him that useth violence and unrighteousnes in y^e lawe: (O how good a thinge is it, a man y^e is reprovied, to shewe openly his repentance: for so shalt thou escape wylfull synne.)

Some man keepeth sylence, and is founde wyse: but he that is not ashamed what he sayeth, is hatefull. Some man holdeth his tongue, because he hath not the understandinge of the language: and some man keepeth sylence, waytinge a comenient tyme. A wyse man wyll holde his tongue tyll he se oportunitie, but a wanton and an undiscrete body shal regarde no tyme. He that useth many wordes, shal hurte his owne soule: and he that taketh auctorite vpon him unrighteously, shalbe hated.

Some man hath oft tymes prosperite in wicked thinges: A gayne, some man getteth moch, and hath harme and losse. There is some gift that is nothinge worth: A gainie, there is some gift, whose rewarde is dubble. Some man getteth a fall for beyng to proude, and some cometh to worshipec from lowe estate. Some man bieth moch for a litle pryce, and must paye for it sevenfolde.

A wyse man with his wordes maketh himself to be loved, but the favours of foolles shalbe poured out. The gift of the unwyse shal do the no good, for his eyes are seven folde. He shal geue litle, & saye he gave moch: he openeth his mouth and crieth out, as it were one that crieth out wyne. To daye he lendeth, to morow he axeth it agayne, and soch a man is to be hated. The foole sayeth: I have no frende, I have no thanke for all my good dedes: yee even they that ate my bred, speake no good of me. O how oft, and of how many shal he be laughed to scorne? He taketh a more perlonis fall by soch wordes, then yf he fell vpon the ground: even so shal the falles of wicked men come haistely. In the mouth of him that is untaught, are many unconuenient and unmete wordes. A wyse sentence shal not be allowed at the mouth of the foole, for he speaketh it not in due season.

Some man synneth not, because he hath not wherewithall, and in his rest he shal be stynged. Some man there is that destroyeth his owne soule with shame, and for an unwyse bodyes sake destroyeth he it, (and with acceptinge of personnes shal he vndoos himself.) Some man promisetht his frende a gift for very shame, and getteth an enemye of him for naught. A lye is a wicked shame in a man, yet shall it be ever in the mouth of the unwyse. A thefe is better, then a man that is accustomed to synne, but they both shal haue destruction to heretage. The conditions of lyers are vn honest, and their shame is ever with them.

A wyse man shall brynge himself to honour with his wordes, and he that hath understandinge shall be sett by amonge great men. He that tyllith his londe, shal increase his heape of corne: he that worketh righteousness, shall be exalted, & he that pleaseth great men, shal escape moch euell. Rewar des and giftes blynde the eyes of the wyse, and make him domme, that he can not tell me their fantes. Wyssdome that is hyd, and treasure that is hoorded vp, what profit is in them both? Better is he that keepeth his ignorance secreete, then a man that hydeth his wyssdome.

The XXI. Chapter.

A sonne, yf thou hast synned, do it nomore: but praye for thy foresynnes, that they maye be forgiven the. Gett from synne, even as from a serpent: for yf thou comest to nye her, she wyll bite the. The teeth therof are as the teeth of a lyon, to slaye the soules of men. The wickednes of man is as a sharpe two edged swerde, which maketh soch woundes that they can not be healed.

Stryfe and wrongeous dealinge shall waiste awaye a mans goodes, & thorow pryde a rich house shalbe brought to naught: so the riches of the proude shalbe roted out. The prayer of the poore goeth out of the mouth, and cometh vnto the eares, and his vengeance (or defence) shall come, and y^e haistely. Who so hateth to be resourmed, it is a token of an vngodly personne: but he that feareth God, wyll remembre himself. A mightie man is knowne a farre of by his tongue, but he that hath understandinge, perceaueth that he shal haue a fall.

Who so buyldeth his house with other mens cost, is like one that gathereth stones in wynter. The congregacion of the vngodly is like stubble gathered together, their ende is a flamme of fyre. The waye of the vngodly is sett with stones, but in their ende is hell, darcknes, and paynes. He that keepeth the lawe, wyll holde fast the vnderstan dinge therof, and the ende of the feare of God is wysdome. He that is not wyse, wyll not be taught in good: but the unwyse man aboundeth in wickednes: and where bytternes is, there is no vnderstondinge. The knowlege of the wyse shall flowe like water that renneth ouer, and his counsell is like a fountayne of life.

E The hert of a foole is like a brokē vessell, he can kepe no wysdome. Whan a man of vnderstondinge heareth a wyse worde, he shal commende it, and make moch of it. But yf a voluptuous man heare it, he shall haue no pleasure therein, but cast it behynde his back. The talkynge of a foole is like an heuy burthen by the waye: but to heare a wyse man speake, it is a pleasure. Where a dource is in the congregacion, it is axed at the mouth of the wyse, and they shal pondre his wordes in their hertes. Like as a house that is destroyed, euen so is wysdome vnto a foole: As for the knowlege of the unwyse, it is but darck wordes. Doctryne is vnto him þ hath no vnderstondinge, euen as fetters aboute his fete, and like manicles vpon his right hande. A foole listeth vp his voyce w laughter, but a wyse man shall scarce laugh secretly.

D Lernynge is vnto a wyse man a Jewell of golde, and like an armlett vpo his right arme. A foolish mans foote is soone in his neighbours house, but one that hath experience, shall be ashamed at the personne of the mightie. A foole wyll pepe in at y wyndow in to the house, but he that is well nourtured, wyll stonde without. A foolish man stondest herkenynge at the dore, but he that is wyse, wyll be ashamed.

L The lippes of the unwyse wyll be tellynge foolish thinges, but y wordes of soch as haue vnderstondinge, shalbe weyed in the balance. The hert of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wyse is in their hert. Whan the vngodly curseth the blasphemur, he curseth his owne soule. A pienty accuser of oother men shal desyle his owne soule, and be hated of everyman: (but he that kepeth his tonge and is discrete, shall come to honoure.)

The XXII. Chapter.

A Slouthfull body is moulded of a stone of clare: he that toucheth him, must wash his handes agayne. A mysnurtured sonne is the dishonoure of the father. A foolish daughter shalbe litle regarded. A wyse daughter is an heretage vnto hir husbande: but she that cometh to dishonesty, bringeth hir father in heynnes. A daughter that is past shame, dishonoureth both hir father & hir husbande: the vngodly shal regarde her, but they both shal despise her. the playenge of Musick is not mete where heynnes is, euen so is the correccio & doctryne of wysdome euer vnpleasante vnto fooles.

Who so teacheth a foole, is euen as one that gleneth a potsherde together: as one that telleth a taylor to him that heareth him not, and as one that rayseth a mā out of an heuy slepe. Who so telleth a foole of wysdome, is euen as a man, which speaketh to one þ is a slepe. Whā he hath tolde his taylor, he sayeth: what is the matter? Whā one dyeth, lamentacion is made for him, because the light sayleth him: eue so let me mourne ouer a foole, for he wanteth vnderstondinge. Make but litle wepinge because of the deed. for he is come to rest: but the life of the foole is worse then the death. Seven dayes do men mourne for him that is deed, but the lamentacion ouer the unwyse and vngodly shulde endure all the dayes of their life.

Talke not moch with a foole, and go not with him that hath no vnderstondinge. Bewarre of him, lest it turne the to trauayle, & thou shalt not be desyled with his synne. Depart from him, and thou shalt fynde rest, & shalt not be drawē back in to his foolishnes. What is heuyer then leade? And what shulde a foole be called els, but leade? Soke, sale & a lōpe of yron is easier to beare, then an unwyse, foolish, and vngodly man. Like as the band of wodde bounde together in the foundation of the house can not be lowsed, eue so is it with þ hert þ is stablised in þ thought of coucell. The thought of the wyse, shal neither feare ner be offended at any tyme.

Like as a fayre playstred wall in a winter house, & an hye buyldinge, maye not abyde þ wide & storme: eue so is a fooles hert afrayed in his ymaginacion: he feareth at every thinge, and can not endure. He that nyppeth a mans eye, bringeth forth teares: and he that pricketh the hert, bringeth forth þ meanyng & thought. Who so casteth a stone at the byrdes, frayeth them awaye: & he þ blasphemeth his frēde, breaketh þ frēdshipe, though thou drewest a swerde at thy frende, yet displaye not, for thou mayest come agayne to þ frende. If he speake sowerly, feare not, for ye maye be agreed together agayne: excepte it be so that thou blaspheme him, bysdayne him, open his secretes and wounde him traitorously: for all soch thinges shal dryue awaye a frende.

E Be faithfull vnto y^e neghb^r in his pover-te, that thou mayest reioyse with him also in his prosperite. Abide stedfast vnto him in y^e tyme of his trouble, that thou maiest be hey-res^t him in his heretage. Like as the vapor and smoke goeth out at the oven before y^e fy-re, even so euell wordes, rebukes and threatenynges go before bloudsheddinge. Be not ashamed to defende y^e frende: as for me, I wyl not hyde my face from him, though he shul-de do me harme. Who so ever heareth it, shal beware of him. Who shal set a watch before my mouth, & a sure seale vpon my lippes, y^e I fall not wth th^e, & y^e my tonge destroye me not?

Psal. 140

The XXIII. Chapter.

LORDE, father and gouernoure of my life, leave me not in their ymaginaciō & counsell. Oh let me not fall in soch reprose. Who wyl kepe my thought with y^e scourge, and the doctryne of wysdōme in myne herte: that he spare not myne ig-norauce, that I fall not with them, lest my ne ignorances increase, that myne offences be not many in nombre, and that my synnes exceede not: lest I fall before myne enemyes, and so my aduersary reioyse. O LORDE, thou father & God of my life, leane me not in their ymaginacion. O let me not haue a proude loke, but turne awaye all voluptuousnes fro me. Take fro me the lustes of the body, let not the desyres of vncleannes take holde vpon me, and geue me not ouer in to an vnshame-fast and obstinate mynde.

Hear me (o ye children) I will geue you a doctryne, how ye shal orde y^e month: who so kepeth it, shal not perish thorow his lippes, ner be hurt thorow wicked wordes (As for the synner, he shalbe taken in his owne vanite: he that is proude and cursed, shal fall therin.) Let not thy mouth be accustomed with swearing, for in it there are many falles. Let not the namynge of God be continually in y^e mouth: for like as a seruaunt which is oft punysshed can not be without some sore, even so what so ever he be y^e sweareth and nameth God, shal not be cleane purged frō synne. A man that vseth moch swearing, shalbe fylled with wickednes, and the plague shall neuer go from his house. If he begyle his brother, his faute shalbe vpon him: yf he knowlege not his synne, he maketh a dubble offence: and yf he sweare in vayne, he shall not be founde righteous, for his house shal-be full of plages.

The wordes of y^e swearer bringeth death (God graunte y^e it be not founde in the house

soch and lye not weltringe in synne. Use not y^e mouth to vn honest and fythye talkynge, for in it is the worde of synne. Remembre y^e father and thy mother, w^{hā} thou art set amonge greete men: lest God forget y^e in their sight, and lest thou dotinge in thy custome, suffere rebuke, and wyshe not to haue bene bone, and so curse the daye of thy natiuite. The man that is accustomed with the wordes of blasphemy, wyl neuer be resourmed all y^e day-es of his life. To synne crosse is to moch, but the thirde bringeth wraath and destruccion.
An whote stomack cannot be quenched (euē like a burnynge fyre) tyll it haue swallowed vp somchige: euē so an vnchaste mā hath no rest in his flesh, tyll he haue kyndled a fyre.

1. Re. 16. b

All bried is swete to an whoremonger, he wyl not leane of, tyll he haue his purpose. A man that breaketh wedlock, & regardeth not his soule, but sayeth: Tush, who seyth me? I am compassed aboute with bardnes, the walles couer me, no body seyth me: whom nede I to feare? The chyldest wyl not remembre my synnes. (He vnderstandeth not that his eyes se all thinges, for all soch feare of mē dryueth awaye the feare of God from him:
for he feareth onely the eyes of men, and considereth not that the eyes of the LORDE are clearer then the Sonne, beholdinge all y^e
wayes of men and the grounde of the depe,
and lokynge euen to mens hertes in secrete places. The LORDE God knewe all thinges or euer they were made, and after they be brought to passe also he loketh vpon them
all. The same mā shalbe opely punysshed in y^e stretes of y^e cite, and shalbe chased abroad
like a yonge horse foale: and whan he thinketh lest vpon it, he shalbe take, Thus shal
he be put to shame of fevery man, because he wolde not vnderstonde the feare of the LOR-DE. And thus shal it go also wth euery wyfe y^e leaneth hir husbāde, & getteth enheretance
by a straunge mariage. First, she hath bene vnfaithfull vnto the lawe of y^e chyldest: Secō-
dly, she hath forsaken hir owne husbāde:
Thirde, she hath played y^e whore in aduontry, & gottē hir childrē by another man. She shalbe brought out of y^e cōgregaciō, and hir childrē shalbe loosed vpō. Hir childrē shal not take rote: & as for frute, hir brāches shal bā-ge forth none. A shamefull reporte shal she leue behynde her, & hir dishonōr shal not be put out. And they y^e remayne, shal knowe, y^e there is nothinge better, thē y^e feare of God: &
y^e there is nothinge sweter, then to take hede vnto the commaundementes of the LORDE.

for longe life shalbe receaved of him.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Wysdome shal praysse herself, & be honoured in God, & reioyse in y myddest of his people: In the cōgregacions of the hyest shal she open hir mouth, & tryumphe in y beholdinge of his power: In y myddest of hir people shal she be exalted, & wondred at in the holy fulnesse: In the multitude of the chosen she shal be commended, & amonge soch as be blessed she shal be praysed, & shal saye: I am come out of the mouth of y hyest, first borne before all creatures. I caused y light & sayleth not, to aryse in the heauen, & covered all the earth as a cloude. My dwellinge is aboue in y heyth, & my seate is in the piler of the cloude. I my self alone haue gone rounde aboute the compasse of heauen, & pearced the grounde of y depe: I haue walked in the floudes of y see, & haue stonde in all landes: my demynion is in euery people and in euery nacion, & with my power haue I troden downe the hertes of all, both hye and lowe.

In all these thinges also I sought rest, & a dwellinge in some inheritance. So y creator of all thinges gaue me a commaundement: & he that made me, appoynted me a tabernacle, and saide vnto me: Let thy dwellinge be in Jacob, and thy inheritance in Israel, & rote thy self amonge my chosen. I was created from the begynninge and before the worlde, & shal not leaue of vnto the worlde to come. In the holy habitacion haue I serued before him, and so was I stablished in Sion. In y holy cite rested, I in like maner, & in Jerusalem was my power. I toke rote in an honourable people, enen in the porcion of y LORDE & in his heretage, & kepte me in y fulnes of the sayntes. I am sett vp an hye like a Cedar vpo Libanus, & as a Cypress tre vpon the mount Hermon: I am exalted like a palme tre in Cadus, & as a rose place in Jericho: As a sayre olyue tre in the felde, & am exalted like as a plantayne tre by the water syde. I haue geuen a smell in the stretes, as y Cynamom and Balme, that hath so good a sauoure: yee a swete odoure haue I geuen, as it were Myrr of the best.

I haue made my dwellinges to smell as it were of rosyn, Galbanum, of Clowes and Incense, & as Libanus whan it is not hewē downe, & mine odoure is as the pure Balme. As the Terebynte haue I stretched out my brawiches, and my braunches are the braunches of honour and lorynge sauoure. As y vyne haue I brought forth frute of a swete saouore, and my floures are y frute of hono and riches. I am the mother of bewtye, of lo ve, of feare, of knowlege & of holy hope. In me is all grace of life and truerh: In me is all hope of life and vertue. Come vnto me, all ye that be desyrous of me, and fyll youre selues with my frutes: for my spere is sweter then hony, & so is my inheritance more then the hoiry combe: the remembraunce of me endureth for evermore. They that eate me, shal haue the more hunger: and they that drynke me, shal thyrste the more. Who so herkeneth vnto me, shal not come to confucion: and they that worke in me, shal not offende. They that make me to be knowne, shal haue everlastinge life.

All these thinges are the boke of life, the couenaunt of the hyest, and the knowlege of the truerh. Moses commaunded the lawe in the preceptes of righteousness for an heretage vnto the house of Jacob, and comitted y promyses vnto Israel (Out of Dauid his seruante he ordeined to raise vp a most mighty kinge, syttinge in the seate of honoure for euermore.) This fylleth with wysdome like as the floude of Phison, & as y floude of Tigris, whan the new frutes are a growinge.

This bringeth a plenteous vnderstandinge, like Euphrates: & fylleth it vp, as Jordane in the tyme of haruest. This maketh nure to breake forth as the light, & as the water Gi hon in y haruest. The first hath not knowne her perfectly, nomore shal the last seke out y grounde of her. For hir thought is fuller the the see, and hir counsell is profounder then the greates depe.

I wysdome haue cast out floudes. I am as a greates water broke out of y river. I am as the ryuer Doux, and as a water condyte am I come out of the garden of pleasure. I sayde: I wyl water the garden of my yonge plantes, and fyll the frute of my byrth. So my water broke became excedinge greates, and my ryuer appioched vnto the see. For I make doctryne to be vnto all mē as light as the sayre moynynge, and I shal make it to be euer the clearer. (I will pearse thorow all the lower partes of the earth, I wyl loke vpon all soch as be a slepe, and lighten all the that put their trust in the LORDE.) I shal yet poure out doctrine, like as prophesy, and leaue it vnto soch as seke after wysdome, and their generacions shal I neuer sayle, vnto the holy everlastinge worlde. Beholde, how that I haue not laboured for my self only, but for all them y seke after y truerh.

2 Whā thou hast gathered nothynge in thy youth, what wylt thou fynde thē in thine age? Whow pleasaunt a thynge is it, whā gray headed men are discrete, & whā the elders can geue good counsell? Whow coly a thynge is wysdome vnto aged men? yee vnderstandynge and counsell is a glorious thynge. The crowne of olde men is to haue moch experience, & & feare of God is their worshippe.

2 There be ix. thinges, which I haue iudged in my hert to be happie, and the tenth wil I tell forth vnto men with my tonge. A man yf whyle he lyueth, hath ioye of his childien, and seith & fall of his enemyes. Well is him, that dwelleth with an houswife of vnderstandinge, and that hath not fallen wiche his tonge, and & hath not bene faine to serue soch as are vnnete for him. Wel is him, & fyndeth a faichfull frende: & wel is him, which talketh of wysdome to an eare & heareth him. Whow greate is he, & fyndeth wysdome & knowlege? Yet is he not aboue him, that feareth the LORDE. The feare of God hath sett itself aboue all thinges. Blessed is & man, vnto whō it is graunted to haue the feare of God. Vnto whō shal he be lickened, & keperth it fast? The feare of God is the begynnynge of his loue, and the begynnynge of faich is to cleue fast vnto it. The heuynes of the hert is all the punysshment, and the wickednes of a woman goeth aboue all. All punysshment & plage is nothynge in comparisō of the plage of the hert, enē so all wickednes is nothynge to the wickednes of a woman.

2 What so ener happeneth vnto a man, is nothynge in comparisō of it, & his euill wilers do vnto him: and all vengeaunce is nothynge to the vengeaunce of the enemye. There is not a more wicked heade then the heade of the serper, and there is no wrath aboue & wrath of a woman. I wyl rather dwell with a lyon and dragon, then to kepe house with a wicked wyfe. The wickednesse of a woman chaungeth hir face, she shal mossfell hir countenance as it were a Beer, & as a sack shal she shewe it amonge the neighbours. Hir husbāde is brought to shame amōge his negh bouris, & whā he heareth it, it maketh him to sigh. All wickednes is but litle to the wickednes of a woman, & porcion of the vngodly shal fall vpon her.

Like as to clymme vp a sondy waye is to yfete of the aged, enē so is a wise full of wordes to a still quyet man. Loke not to narrowly vpon the bewtye of a woman, lest thou be prouoked in desyre towarde her. The wrath of a woman is dishonoure and greate confusio. If a woman gett the mastrie, then is she contrary to hir husbāde. A wicked wyfe maketh a sory hert, an heuy countenance and a deed wounde. Of the woman came & begynnynge of synne, and thoro her we all are deed. Geue thy water no passage, no not a litle, nether geue a wicked woman hir will. If she walke not after thy hande, she shal confounde the in the sight of thy enemyes. Cut her of then from thy flesh, that she do not allwaye abuse the.

The XXVI. Chapter.

2 Appie is the man that hath a vertuous wyfe, for the nobre of his yeares shalbe dubble. An honest woman maketh hir husbāde a ioyfull man, & she shal fyll & yeares of his life in peace. A vertuous woman is a noble gift, which shalbe geuen for a good porcion vnto soch as feare God. Whether a man be rich or poore, he maye haue euer a mery hert, & a chearful countenance. There be thre thinges & my hert feareth, and my face is a frayed of the fourth. Treason in a cite, a sedicious people, and noysome tonges, all these are heuyer then the death. But whā one is gelous ouer his wife, it bryngeth payne and sorowe vnto the hert: and a woman that telleth out all thinges, is a scourge of the tonge. Whā one hath an euill wife, it is euen as whā an vnlike pare of oxen must drawe together: he that getteth her, getteth a scorpion. A drunken woman is a greete plage, for she can not coner hir owne shame.

his bones with hit wysdome. A woman of few wordes is a gift of God, and to a well nurtured mynde maye noching be compared.

C An honest and manerly woman is a gyfte above other gyses, and there is no waight to be compared, vnto a mynde that can rule it self. Like as the Sonne whan it aryseth, is an ornament in the hie heauen of THE LORD, so is a vertuous wife THE bewtye of all hir house. Like as the cleare light is vpon THE holy candelstick, so is the bewtye of the face vpon an honest body. Like as the golde pilers are vpon the soffetres of syluer, so are the fayre legges vpon a woman that hath a constant mynde. (Perpetuall are the foundations that be laied vpon a whole stonye rocke, so are THE commaundementes of God vpon an holy woman.)

Cant. 4. d

D There be two thinges THE greue my heart, and in the thirde is a displeasure come vpon me. Whan an experie man of warre suffreth scarsenes and pouerte, Whan men of vnder standinge and wysdome are not set by: And whan one departeth from righteousnes vnto synne. Who so doth soch, the LORD hath prepared him vnto the swerde. There be two maner of thinges, which me thyncke to be herde and perylous. A marchaunt can not lightly kepe him from wronge, nether a tawerner himself from synne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

A Cause of ponerte haue many one of fended: and he that seeketh to be riche, turneth his eyes asyde. Like as a nalle in the wall sticketh fast betwixte two stones, even so doth synne sticke betwixte THE byer and the seller. If he holde him not diligently in THE feare of the LORD, his house shall soone be ouerthrowne. Like as whan one sitteth, the fylehynes remayneth in the syue: So, remayneth there some vncleane thinge in the thought of man. The oven proueth the potters vessell, so doth tentacion of trouble trye righteous men. The tre of the felde is knowne by his frute, so is the thought of mans heart knowne by his wordes. Praise no man except thou haue harde him, for a man is knowne by his wordes. If thou folowest righteousnes, thou shalt get her, and put her vpon THE as a fayre garment. (And thou shalt dwell with her, and she shall defende thee for ever, and in THE daye of knowlege thou shalt fynde stedfastnesse.) The byrdes resorte vnto their like, so doth the trueth turne vnto them that be occupied withall. The lyon wayteth for THE praye: so do the synnes lurke vpon the wordes of wickednes. The talkinge of him that feareth God, is noching but wysdome: as for a foole, he chaungeth as THE Moone. If thou be amonge the vndiscere, kepe thy wordes to a conuenient tyme, but amonge soch as be wysse, speake on hardely. The talkinge of fooles is abhominacion, and their spoite is voluptuousnesse and mysurtonne. Much swearynge maketh the hayre to stande vp, and to stryue with soch, stoppeth the eares.

Eccle. 23. b

The stryfe of the proude is bloudsheddyng, and their blasphemynge is heuy to heare. Who so discouerech secretes, lesech his credence, and syndeth no frende after his will. Loue thy frende, and bynde thyself in faithfulness with him: but yf thou bewrayest his secretes, thou shalt not get him agayne: For like as the man is that destroyeth his enemye so is he also that dealeth falsly in the frendshipe of his neighbour.

Eccle. 19. b
and 22. d

Like as one that letteth a byrde go out of his honde, can not take her agayne: Euen so thou, yf thou geue ouer thy frende, thou canst not get him agayne: For thou castest not come by him, for he is to farre of. He is vnto thee as a Roob escaped out of the snare, for his soule is wounded. As for woundes, they maye be bounde vp agayne, and an euell worde maye be reconcyled: but who so bewrayeth the secretes of a frende, there is no more hope to be had vnto him.

D

He that wyncketh with the eyes, ymagineth some euell, and no man shal take him from it. Whan thou art present, he shal hyllie commend and prayse thy wordes: but at the last he shall turne his taylor, and flauder thy sayenge. Many thinges haue I hated, but noching so euell, for the LORD himself also abhorreth soch one.

Pro. 10. b

Who so casteth a stone an hie, it shal fall vpon his owne heade: and he that synneth with gyle, woundeth himself. Who so diggeth a pytt, shal fall therein: and he that layeth a snare, shal be taken in it himself. Who so geueth a wicked noysome counsell, it shal come vpon himself, and he shall not knowe from whence. The proude blasphemie and are scornefull, but vengeance lurketh for them as a lyon. They that reioyse at the fall of THE righteous, shal be taken in THE snare, anguyshe of heart shal consume them before they dye. Anger and rigorousnes are two abhominable thinges, and THE vngodly hath them both vpon him.

Mat. 5. 38
Eccl. 3. 1

A that seeketh vengeance, shall fynde vengeance of the LORD, which shall surely kepe him his synnes. Forgeue thy neighbour the hurte that he hath done the, and so shall thy synnes be forgiven the also, when thou prayest. A man that beareth hatred agaynst another, how darre he desire forgiveness of God? He that sheweth no mercy to a man which is like himself, how darre he expect forgiveness of his synnes? If he that is but flesh, beareth hatred and keepeth it, who wyl increate for his synnes? Remember the ende, and let enemye passe, which seeketh death and destruction, and abyde thou in thy commaundementes. Remember thy commaundement, so shalt thou not be rigorous over thy neighbour. Think vpon the couenaunt of thy yest, and forgive thy neighbours ignorance. Bewarre of strife, and thou shalt make thy synnes fewer. For an angry man kindleth variaunce, and the vngodly disquieteth frendes, and putteth discorde amonge them that be at peace. The more wodd there is, the more vehement is the fyre: and the mightier the men be, the greater is the wrath: and the longer the strife endureth, the more it burneth.

Eccl. 3. 1

Prov. 16. 27

Eccl. 3. 1

An haistie brawlinge kindleth a fyre, and an haistie strife sheddeth bloude. If thou blowe the sparke: it shall burne: If thou spytte vpon it, it shall go forth, and both these go out of thy mouth. The slanderer and double tongued is cursed, for many one that be frendes setteth he at variaunce. The thirde tonge hath disquieted many one, and dryuen them from one londe to another. Stronge cities hath it broken downe, and overthrowne the houses of greate men. The thirde tonge hath cast out many an honest woman, and robbed them of their labours. Who so, harkeneth vnto such, shall neuer fynde rest, and neuer dwell safely. The stroke of a rod maketh yedders, but the stroke of the tonge smyteth the bones in sunder. There be many that haue perished with the sward, but many more thorow the tonge.

Wel is him that is kepte fro an euell tonge, and cometh not in the anger therof: which draweth not the yock of such, and is not bounde in the bondes of it. For the yock therof is of yron, and the bonde of it of stele. The death therof is a very euell death: hell were better for one, then such a tonge. But the fyre of it maye not oppresse them that feare God, and the flamme therof maye not burne the. Such as forsake the LORD, shall fall therein: and it shall burne them, and no man shall be able to quench it. It shall fall vpon the as a Lyon, and deuoure them as a leparde. Thou hedgest thy goodes with thornes: why dost thou not rather make doores and barres for thy mouth? Thou weiest thy golde and syluer: why dost thou not weye thy wordes also vpon the balance? Bewarre, that thou flyde not in thy tonge, and so fall before thine enemies, that laye wayte for the.

The XXIX. Chapter.

Who so wil shewe mercy, let him lende vnto his neighbour: and he that is able, let him kepe the commaundement. Lende vnto thy neighbour in tyme of his nede, and paye thou thy neighbour agayne in due season. Kepe thy worde, and deale faithfully with him, and thou shalt allwaye fynde the thinge which is necessary for the. There haue bene many, that when a thinge was lent them, rekened it to be founde: and made them trauaile and labour, that had helped them. Whyle they receaue any thinge, they kysse the handes of such as geue them, and for their neighbours good they hylle their voyce. But when they shulde paye agayne they kepe it backe, and geue euell wordes, and make many excuses by reason of the tyme: and though he be able, yet geueth he scarce the half agayne, and rekeneth the other to be founde. And yf he withholde not his moneye, yet hath he an enemye of him, and that vnderferued.

Deut. 15. 2
Luc. 6. 34

He payeth him with cursinge and rebuke and geueth him euell wordes for his good dede. There be many one which are not glad for to lende, not because of euell, but they feare to lese the thinge that they lende. Yet haue thou patience with the simple, and withholde not mercy from him. Helpe the poore for the commaundementes sake, and let him not go emptye from the because of his necessity. Lese thy moneye for thy brother and neighbours sake, and burye it not vnder a stone, wher it rusteth and corruppeth. Gather thy treasure after the commaundement of thy yest, and so shall it bunge the more profite the golde. Laye vpon the almes in the hande of the poore, and it shall kepe the from all euell. (A mans almes is as a purse with him, and shall kepe a mans fauoure as the apple of an eye: and afterwarde shall it aryse, and paye every man his rewarde vpon his heade.) It shall fight for the agaynst thine enemies, better then the shylde of a giaunte, or speare of the mightie.

Migh tie people hath it dryuen awaye, and caused the to wandre in straunge countrees. An vngodly man transgressynge the commaundement of the L O R D E, shal fall in to an euell suertishipe: and though he force himself to get out, yet shal he fall in to iudgment. Helpe thy neighbour out after thy power, and bewarre, y thou thy self fall not in soch dett. The chese thinge that kepeth in the life, is water and bried, clothinge and lodginge, to couer the shame.

Better is it to haue a poore lyuynge in a mans owne house, the delicate fayre amoge the straunge. Be it litle or moch y thou hast, holde the contēt withall (z thou shalt not be blamed as a vagabounde:) for a myserable life is it, to go from house to house: and where a mā is fremde, he darre not opē his mouth. Though one be lodged, and haue meate and drynke, yet shall he be taken as unworthy, z heare many bytter rough wordes, namely thus: Go thy waye thou stranger, and prepare a table (for thy self, and fede me also of that thou hast. Awaye thou stranger (so, that he regardeth his honoure nomore) my brother cometh in to my house, z so he telleth him the necessite of his house. These thinges are heuy to a man that hath vnder standinge: namely, the forbyddinge of y house, z that the leder casteth him in the ceth.

Who so loueth his childe, holdeth him still vnder correccion, that he maye haue ioye of him afterwarde (and that he grope not after his neighbours dores.) He y teacheth his sonne, shall haue ioye in him, z nede not be ashamed of him amoge his aquantafice. Who so enfourmed z teacheth his sonne, greueth y enemye, and before his frendes he maye haue ioye of him. Though the father dye, yet is he as though he were not deed: for he hath left one behynde him that is like him. In his life he sawe him, z had ioye in him, z was not sorry in his death, (nether was he ashamed before y enemies.) For he left behinde him an auenger agaynst his enemies, and a good doer vnto the frendes. For the life of childre he shal binde the woundes together, and his

here is greued at every crye. An vntamed horse wylbe harde, and a wanton childe wyl be wylfull. If thou brynge vp thy sonne delicatly, he shal make y a frayed: and yf thou playe with him, he shal brynge the to heuynes. Laugh not with him, lest thou wepe w him also, and lest thy ceth be sett on edge at the last.

Geue him not liberte in his youth, z excuse not his foly. Bow downe his neck whyle he is yonge, hytt him vpon the sydes whyle he is yet but a childe, lest he waxe stubburne, z geue no more force of y (and so shalt thou haue heuynes of soule.) Teach thy childe, z be diligēt therin, lest it be to thy shame. Better is the poore heyng whole z stronge, the a man to be riche, z not to haue his healt. Health and welfare is aboue all golde, and an whole body aboue all treasure. There is no riches aboue a sounde body, z no ioye aboue the ioye of the hert. Death is better then a wretched life, or contynuall sicknes. The good thinges y are put in a close mouth, are like as whan meate is layed vpon y grane.

Eccli. 7. c

What good doth the offeringe vnto an Idoll? For he can nether eate, taist ner smell. Eue so is it also with the riche, whom God maketh sette: he seith it with his eyes, z groweth thereafter, and is euen as a gelded man, that lyeth with a vyrgin and sygeth. Geue not ouer thy mynde in to heuynes, z vexe not thy self in thine owne counsell. The ioye z chearfulness of the hert is the life of man, and a mans gladnes is the prolonginge of his dayes. Loue thine owne soule, and comforte thine hert: as for sorow and heuynes, dryne it farte from y, for heuynes hath slayne many a man, and bryngeth no profit. Zele and anger shorten the dayes of the life: carefulness and sorow brynge age before the tyme. Vnto a mery hert every thinge hath a good taist, that he eateth.

Tanayle and carefulness for riches taketh awaye the slepe, and maketh the flesh to cosume. Whan one lyeth and taketh care, he waketh ener vp, like as greate sicknes breaketh the slepe. The rich hath greate labo^r in gatheringe his riches together, and then with the pleasure of his riches he taketh his rest z is refreshed. But who so laboureth and prospereth not, he is poore: and though he leaue of, yet is he a begger. have founde their destruction before them. It is a tre of fallynge vnto them that offere it vp, and all sode as be foolish fall therein. Blessed is the rich, which is founde without blemyshe, and hath not gone after goide, nor hoped in money and treasures. Where is the re sode one? and we shal commend him, and call him blessed, for greates thynges doth he amonge his people. Who so is tryed, & founde perfecte in sode thynges, shalbe commended and praised. Who might offende, & hath not offended? Who coude do euell, and hath not done it? Therfore shal his good be stablished, and the whole congregacion shal declare his allmeses. If thou syt at a greates mans table, open not thy mouth wyde vpon it, and make not many wordes. Remember, that an euell eye is a shrew.

What thinge created is worse then a wicked eye? therfore wepeth it before euery mans face. Laye not thine hand vpon euery thinge that thine eye seyth, and syrue not with him in the dyshe. Ponder by thy self what thy neighbour wolde fayne haue, & be discrete in euery poynte. Eate the thinge that is set before the, manerly, as it becommeth a man: and eate not to moch, lest thou be abhorred. Leane thou of first of all because of nurture, lest thou be he whom no man maye satisfie, which maye turne to thy decaye. Why? thou syttest amonge many men, reach not thine hande out first of all. How well content is a wise man wth a litle wyne? so y^e in slepe thou shalt not be seke therof nor fele any payne. A iuste wholsome slepe shal sode one haue, and fele no inward greife. He ryseth vp by tymes in y^e moynynge, and is well at ease in him self. But an vsaciablen eateer slepeth vnquyetly, and hath ache and payne of the body. If thou felest that thou hast eaten to moch, aryse, go thy waye, cast it of thy stomack, and take thy rest.

My sonne, heare me, and despyse me not: and at the last thou shalt fynde as I haue tolde the. In all thy workes be diligent and quicke, so shal there no sickness happen vnto the. Who so is liberall in dealynge out his meate, many men shall blesse him and prayse him with their lippes: and the same is a sure token of his loue and faithfulness. But he y^e is vnfaithfull in meate, the whole cite shall complayne of him: and that is a sure experience of his infidelite and wickednes. Be not thou a wine bebbler, for wyne hath destroyed many a man. The fyre proueth y^e hard yron, euen so doth wyne proue the hartes of the proude, when they be dronken.

Wyne sorbely dronken, quycheneth the life of man. If thou dryncdest it measurably, thou shalt be temperate. What life is it, y^e maye contynne without wyne? Wyne was made from the begynnynge to make men glad (and not for dronkennes) Wyne measurably dronke is a reioysinge of the soule and body. But yf it be dronken with excesse, it maketh bytternes and sorowe vnto the mynde. Dronkenes fylleth the mynde of the foolish with shame and ruine, mynsheth the strenght, and maketh woundes. Rebuke not thy neighbour at y^e wyne, and despyse him not in his mynth. Geue him no despytefull wordes, and preasse not vpon him with contrary sayenges.

The XXXII. Chapter.

If thou be made a ruler, p^{ro}uide not thy self therein, but be thou as one of the people. Take diligent care for them, and loke well therto: and when thou hast done all thy dewtye, syt the downe, that thou mayest be merry with them, and receaue a crowne of honoure. Talke wysely & honestly, for wysdome becommeth the right well. Synder not musyck. Speake not, where there is no audience: and poure not forth wysdome out of tyme, at an importunyte. Lik as the Carbuncle stone shyneth, that is set in golde, so doth a songe garnyshe the wyne feast: and as y^e Smaragde that is set in golde, so is the sweetnes of Musyck by y^e mynth of wyne.

Thou yongemaⁿ, speake that becommeth the, & that is profitable, and yet scarce when thou art twyce axed. Comprehende moch with few wordes. In many thynges be as one that is ignorant, geue eare, and holde thy tongue withall. If thou be amonge men of hyer aucteute, desyre not to compare thy self vnto them: and when an elder speaketh, make not thou many wordes therein. Before the thonder goeth lightnyng, and before nurture and shamesfastnesse goeth loue and fauoure. Stode vp by tymes, and be not the last: but get the home soone, & there take thy pastyme, & do what thou wilt: so y^e thou do no euell, and desyre no man. But for all thynges geue thankes, vnto him that hath made the, and replenished the with his goodes.

Who so feareth the LORDE, wyl receaue his doctryne: and they that get them to him by tymes, shall fynde grace. He that seeketh the lawe, shall be fylled withall: As for him y^e is but fayned, he wyl be offended therat. They that feare the LORDE, shal fynde the iudgment, & their righteousnes shal be kyn led as a light. An vngodly man will not be reformed, but can helpe himself with the example of other in his purpose. A man of vnderstandinge despyseth no good counsell: but a wylde and proude body hath no feare. My sonne, do nothinge without advisement, so shal it not repēt the after ȝ dede. Go not in the waye where thou mayest fall, ner where thou mayest stōmble against the stone. Gene not ȝ self in to a labourous slypery waye, and bewarre of thine owne children. In all thy workes put thy trust in God from thy whole hert, for that is the keepinge of the commaundementes. Who so beleueth Gods worde, taketh hede to the commaundementes: ȝ he that putteth his trust in ȝ LORDE, shal wante nothinge.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

21 There shall no euell happen vnto him that feareth God: but whan he is in tentacion, the LORDE shall deliuer him. A wyse man hateth not ȝ lawe, but an hypocryte is as a shyp in a raginge water. A man of vnderstandinge geueth credence vnto the lawe of God, and ȝ lawe is faithfull vnto him. Be sure of the matter, then talke therof: Be first wel instructe, thē maigest thou geue answer. The hert of ȝ foolish is like a cartwhele, and his thoughtes renne aboute like the arell tre. Like as a wylde horse chatneyeth vnder every one ȝ syttech vpon him, so is it with a scomefull frende. Why doth one daie excell another, seynge all the dayes of the yere come of the Sonne? The wyssdome of the LORDE hath so parted them a sūder, and so hath he ordered the tymes and solempne feastes. Some of them hath he chosen and halowed before other dayes. And all men are made of the grounde, ȝ out of the earth of Adam.
